Gandhi Steps Up Crackdown

NEW DELHI — The Indian government today suspended five basic individual rights guaranteed by the constitution, strengthening Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's crackdown on political opponents.

A government spokesman said nearly 900 persons have now been arrested since Mrs. Gandhi announced an emergency decree Thursday to combat a "widespread conspiracy" to undermine the nation's security. Opposition figures said the figure was closer to 3,500.

The prime minister told a radio audience Friday the prisoners were "being treated well and said she was sure the emergency will be lifted soon."

All but one of the capital's 14 daily newspapers appeared on the streets today for the first time in three days but had large blank spaces where news had been censored.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Gandhi today made her first cabinet change since proclaiming a national emergency, naming V. C. Shukla as information minister, the post that implements new censorship regulations.

Censorship Protested

Shukla, former head of the planning commission, switched places with Inder Kumar Gujral, who had been chief of the information ministry for three years.

Foreign observers in New Delhi said this week the suspension of civil liberties and the opposition arrests seem to have been precipitated primarily by the increasing unity of her right-wing opponents.

An analysis by Washington Post correspondent Lewis M. Simons noted that until the court decision convicting Mrs. Gandhi of corrupt election practices, her opposition had been hodgepodge of squabbling parties. In national elections, her Congress party seldom won a clear majority, but it traditionally emerged as the winner because anti-Congress Party votes were spread thin among the warring opposition parties.

The Congress Party learned the wisdom of divide-and-rule from the British, India's long time masters. The party realized that it faced no serious threat while its opposition lacked unity.

Opposition More Unified

The move toward opposition unity came with dramatic swiftness. Two weeks ago, a six-party coalition known as the Jawata Morpha (People's Front), humbled the Congress Party by winning 85 seats in state elections in Gujara.

Other factors behind Mrs. Gandhi's moves may have included:

—The Congress Party itself, the only party to govern India since it achieved independence, was beginning to show some signs of breaking its standard of discipline in favor of morality. Some members of the party, obscured for years beneath thick layers of power and wealth, suggested that Mrs. Gandhi should follow the court's ruling and step down from the prime ministry.

—The judiciary, which critics had attacked in recent years as an effete tool of the ruling party, had shown extraordinary courage and independence in applying the letter and spirit of the law to an all-powerful prime minister.

'SILLY, PETULANT' ACT—IWA

Forest Contract Out

UPTURNED TRUCK was too much for a bridge 25 miles northeast of Kingston, Ontario. The tandem truck carrying six yards of topsoil fell 15 feet into the Gananoque River. The driver was uninjured. Load limit on the bridge is two tons and a new bridge was scheduled for next year.

The forest industry's cancellation of its master agreement with the 29,000 member coast local of the International Woodworkers of America was a "silly, petulant thing to do," Duncan IWA president Fernie Viala said today.

Viala, whose 4,000-member Local 1-80 is among the largest in the union, said the contract cancellation announced Friday by Forest Industrial Relations which bargains for the forest companies, is an attempt to force the IWA into a strike.

"But we have no intention of accommodating them, at this time," Viala said.

The contract cancellation was the first such action to be taken in the industry's labor relations history. The IWA contract expired June 14 but normal practice is to continue operating under the old contract until a new one is signed.

The IWA is counting its strike vote ballots which will be released next week.

FIR vice-president Keith Bennett said the move was brought about by an "impossible situation" which arose from an arbitration ruling last week in favor of the union.

Under the IWA contract any disagreement over contract language interpretation must be taken to arbitration before a judge.

In this case, the arbitration initiated by the IWA resulted in a ruling which grants travel time payments to fallers after a working day of 7½ hours.

Travel time for woods workers other than fallers, is that portion of time in excess of nine hours required to take the workers from the marshalling point to the work site and back to the marshalling point.

But fallers have a different hours-of-work clause in the master agreement and the judge interpreted that clause to mean that a faller's day on the work site is 6½ hours and that any time over and above 7½ hours would be subject to travel time payments.

Travel time is paid at a straight hourly rate, unless it brings the working day in excess of 10 hours when the rate jumps to time-and-a-half.

Bennett said the arbitration award was a fundamental alteration of the intent of the coast agreement and said it "holds immense long-term implications of cost for the industry."

Although the master agreement has been cancelled, Bennett said, the industry will voluntarily observe all other portions of the expired contract except for the travel time provisions for fallers.

He said both he and regional IWA president Jack Munro were parties to the original agreement which only granted travel time payments to fallers after nine hours.

"As the union knows full well, the action was an attempt to acquire benefits for its members through a tech-

MINISTER HALTS WORK ON DIKE

VANCOUVER (CP) — Jeanne Sauve, federal environment minister, ordered a halt to work on a controversial section of the Fraser River dike between Roberts Bank and the Tsawwassen ferry terminal Friday.

MLA Carl Liden (NDP—Delta) and a group led by the B.C. Wildlife Federation previously said the diking work was silting up the south arm of the Fraser to the detriment of salmon runs and was doing other environmental damage.

Bill Otway, BCWF executive director, said he received a wire Friday from Mme. Sauve in which the minister confirmed she has ordered a halt to the diking work. She also said that officials of her department and representatives of the provincial government will meet shortly to set up a study to determine if the work should continue or be abandoned.

The minister said the study "will have to assure the value of the estuary will not be destroyed before diking work may be continued."

Allmand Shift On Punishment

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Solicitor General Warren Allmand said today he would give "serious consideration" to a demand for restoration of the death penalty made by a federation of 143 Quebec police forces.

The federation wants the death penalty for all persons convicted of premeditated murder.

Raising the question in the Commons Friday was Adrien Lambert (SC-Bellechasse). He pointed out that the Quebec Police Federation at its annual meeting in Longueil urged Ottawa to stop commuting death sentences imposed by the courts.

The federation groups some 9,300 members of 143 municipal police forces in the province.

Earlier in the annual meeting the president of the Quebec Provincial Police Association said his 4,000 members might consider strike action to back up their demand for capital punishment. Other police officers at the meeting said "tempers are heating up" although they thought a threat to strike was going too far.

The federation vice-president Robert Miron warned that government inaction in the face of growing police demands to restore capital punishment "may make the situation critical in the near future."

Allmand told the Commons he has not yet received the written request from the federation. He promised to scrutinize his mail carefully next week adding "we do give serious consideration to all correspondence of this nature, especially from police associations."

Meanwhile, the solicitor-general component of the Public Service Alliance of Canada—the representative of federal prison employees—also called Friday for the resumption of capital punishment.

A spokesman for the component made the call when announcing a special executive meeting to be held Sunday to discuss the shooting of two prison guards in Montreal Friday by a prisoner they were escorting to a hospital.

One guard died later.

ANNIVERSARY FOR CRYSTAL

Just a few weeks ago Victoria city council decided to spend $1.5 million on restoring the abandoned Crystal Garden as an arboretum attraction, so it seemed appropriate this week to mark the 50th anniversary of the building's formal opening (see page 7).

Pictures from the Victoria city archives collection recall the old girl in her heyday, as a purveyor of palm court elegance and fun, while in sad contrast we see the Crystal's present state of decay.

NEWS BRIEFS

Deaths Hit 111

NEW YORK (UPI) — A 7-year-old girl who had survived the crash of an Eastern Airlines jet at Kennedy International airport died today as a result of her massive burns, raising the toll from the tragedy to 111. Tina Dispenza's mother was killed in the crash and her father and 9-year-old sister remain in critical condition.

Plane Hijacked

SALONICA, Greece (Reuter) — A hijacker armed with a revolver today ordered the pilot of a Bulgarian plane on a domestic flight to fly to Salonica, where the man immediately asked for political asylum.

Logging Shutdown

PORT ALBERNI (CP) — MacMillan Bloedel announced today it will shut down some of its logging operations in the Alberni Valley and on the west coast of Vancouver Island for about two weeks this summer.

Leg-Trap Bill

OTTAWA (CP) — A bill to prohibit the use of certain animal traps was introduced in the Commons on Friday by Donal'd Munro (PC—Esquimalt-Saanich). The bill is aimed mainly at leg-hold traps, which can result in the trapped animal dying slowly.

Greenpeace Catches Up, Confrontation at Hand

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Greenpeace V anti-whaling mission has found its first dead whales and appears headed for its first confrontation with a Russian whaling fleet, a spokesman said Friday.

"Everything we planned is beginning to happen, "Rod Marining of the Greenpeace Foundation said in an interview.

Marining said the Greenpeace V crew reported it closed in Friday on the Russian whaling ship, Dalnovi Vostok, about 50 miles west of Eureka, Calif., and came across two dead whales.

The Canadian vessel now is pursuing the chaser boat Vlestny heading south, away from the Vostok.

"We intend to carry out our operation as we attempt to interfere with them," crew member Bob Hunter said in a taped report released here by the foundation.

"We have reason to believe that we've caught the Russians killing an undersized sperm whale," he said.

"Paul Watson (another crew member) got on top of one of the dead whales and we measured it. It was somewhat under 30 feet, probably smaller.

"We have to wait to develop the photographs to get the exact length because as we were trying to measure it a killer boat came charging towards us. We spun around our stern and they quickly hauled in the whales."

He said that the second sperm whale was slightly larger.

Meanwhile in London, the International Whaling Commission adopted new rules Friday regarded as the strongest conservation measures ever taken to protect the world's largest creature from extinction.

Ending its annual meeting, the commission brought in new catch quotas which should reduce the global whale catch by about 23 per cent in the coming season. This should bring a reduction of between 7,000 and 8,000 whales from last year's quota of 37,300.

VANCOUVER MAN SWEEP WINNER

VANCOUVER (CP) — Peter Cheng, 25, a Vancouver fisheries biologist, is about $78,000 richer today following the running of the Irish Derby at Curragh, Ireland.

Cheng held an Irish sweepstakes ticket on the winning horse, Grundy. The win was worth $118,000 but Cheng sold a half-interest in his ticket for $20,000.

He receives about $58,000 from the sweepstakes, plus $20,000 from the Irish gambling syndicate that purchased the half-interest.

Cheng said he's quite happy, even though he sold the share of his ticket. He said he made a gamble and he's happy with what he received. He added that he doesn't know what he will do with his winnings.

Another British Columbia winner was John Super of Courtenay. He held a ticket on the third-place horse, Anne's Pretender, and won about $23,600.

A Powell River resident also held a ticket on the third place horse.

B.C. Not Test Case For Curbs: Turner

OTTAWA (FP) — Finance Minister John Turner denied Friday that he has adopted a "B.C. first" approach in holding down wage increases across Canada.

He stressed both inside and outside the House of Commons that his efforts to reach a national consensus earlier this year on the need to keep prices and wages down was no different for one group than for another.

The B.C. Federation of Labor charged Thursday that Turner had persuaded forest industry companies to resist wage demands of the International Woodworkers of America on the grounds that "we've got to whip B.C. into line first," since wages are highest in that province.

At first Turner denied in an interview ever meeting the forest industry council specifically but admitted representatives of the council may have been "around the table" when he talked to B.C. employers earlier in the year as part of his cross-Canada tour to find a consensus.

He denied saying anything in these meetings across the country to one group that he hadn't said to another, and refused to comment when asked if it wouldn't be logical to start a wage cut-back in B.C. where salaries already are the highest.

But later in the Commons he issued his denial of the B.C. Fed charge when John Fraser (PC-Vancouver South) noted that the allegation could have a "very grave" effect on forest industry negotiations now in progress.

"At no time did I make those representations," Turner declared.

U.K. 'SPIES' HELD BY IDI

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — Uganda said today it had arrested two Britons for spying. Uganda state radio said President Idi Amin was "prepared to teach the British a lesson they will never forget."

The announcement clarified a Uganda radio statement Friday that Uganda had detained other members of its 700-strong British community who might suffer the same fate as British lecturer Dennis Hills.

Hostage Threatened Just Before Death

VANCOUVER (CP) — Prisoner Andy Bruce had his left arm around hostage Mary Steinhauser and was threatening her with a knife seconds before she was fatally shot and Bruce wounded, an inquiry into the recent British Columbia penitentiary siege was told Friday.

In the first eyewitness account of the incident, male nurse Tom Hudson gave detailed testimony of events before, during and after the shooting in the prison's classification centre.

But he said he had been absent when the hostages in a vault attached to the centre made their attack on Bruce and Dwight Lucas.

Minutes before the attack, both Bruce and Lucas appeared to be asleep outside the vault and prisoner Claire Wilson was inside the vault with the hostages, apparently asleep and unarmed, Mr. Hudson said.

He said he made two attempts—one written and one by signals—to tell authorities of the situation. It was during the second attempt that the hostages apparently made their rush.

Mr. Hudson said he was standing outside a Dutch door leading to the room during the shooting and was the first person inside when the shooting ended.

Bruce still had his arm around Miss Steinhauser as both lay on the floor bleeding, he said.

Mr. Hudson had taken the place of prison liaison officer Al Hadvick and industries officer Stan Miller, who had maintained close contact with the three prisoners throughout the 41-hour ordeal.

He began his watch at 12:05 a.m. June 11, he said, an hour before the shooting.

When he began his vigil, with a view through the top half of the Dutch door, Mr. Hudson observed Miss Steinhauser lying on a chesterfield in front of and parallel to a sliding door leading to the vault and hostages, he said. She remained there, resting, until seconds before the shooting, Mr. Hudson said.

Soon after he began his shift, Mr. Hudson noted that both Lucas and Bruce were nodding off to sleep, he testified.

Later, Bruce picked up a needle, demanded more Demerol and began to fix himself, but with difficulty.

When Mr. Hudson went to the washroom to pass a note on what he was observing, he heard a banging sound when the washroom door closed.

"I heard shouting, screams. I heard a clattering sound of furniture being knocked over."

At that moment, said Mr. Hudson, he ran straight out

The 'Cod-Father' Draws Crowds

ALEXANDER
. . . beaming health

Dale Alexander blew through town again this week, tanned and chubby, beaming and bringing the good word about good health.

The good word in Alexander's case is all about cod liver oil and the much-travelled author, lecturer and "nutrition scientist" from California is so insistent he hts been dubbed "the Cod-father."

Alexander will lecture at Vancouver's Queen Elizabeth Theatre Sunday on "How to slow down the aging process." He's been telling people about the value of cod liver oil for the past 25 years, attracting an overflow crowd to The Empress when he spoke last year.

He says there's going to be a revolution in preventative medicine in the next five years or so "or we're going to be taxed out of our homes because it will cost $500 a day to be in hospital."

Staying healthy, he says, is a matter of assimilatisg dietary oils but the way we eat often inhibits this.

Out of this theory, the ice cube emerges as a "deadly crippler," congealing oils, blocking the digestive tract from drawing proper nourishment.

Life, Alexander insists, is war between solids and liquids in the stomach. The timing, temperature and type of liquids we drink will decide which disease brings us down.

Anyone who drinks coffee or tea, water or skim milk with meals, in fact from 10 minutes before meals to three hours after, is fouling up the critical oil absorption process.

"They'll be lucky to see 70 years, and that means they're lopping 50 years off their potential lifespan of 120 years."

God liver oil shouldn't be just a childhood supplement, he says, but a lifelong habit which will lubricate away troubles such as arthritis.

He recommends a spoonful of cod liver oil in three ounces of whole mi lk, shaken together to disguise the taste, and downed on an empty stomach an hour before breakfast.

When Alexander hits the road to promote his theories and books, he leaves modesty behind. He says he has asked his audiences in the past to promote him for a Nobel prize. Now he wants to be appointed "nutrition czar" by U.S. President Ford.

Bombing Raids Terrorize Wealthy Beirut Suburbs

BEIRUT (AP) — Hit-and-run bombers terrorized wealthy neighborhoods in this capital of Lebanon while street fighting raged unabated in the poorer eastern suburbs Friday night and early this morning.

The five-day casualty toll reached 42 dead and 97 wounded as eight more persons died overnight and 39 were wounded in the eastern suburbs where leftist Moslems and Palestinian guerrillas are battling right-wing Christian militiamen.

Dynamite blasts destroyed five shops and a Lebanese bank in business districts and quiet residential areas previously untouched by the conflict. One of the establishments was a British-owned grocery store popular with foreigners.

Beirut radio said the bombs were thrown "by elements who want to escalate tension in the capital." It also reported that Lebanese security forces were able to halt an outbreak of shooting in the city's main commercial area, on a street occupied by major foreign and Arab banks.

The U.S. and several other embassies warned their nationals to stay home because of isolated sniper fire.

MOST ROADS CLOSED

Most of the major roads in the northeast and eastern districts of Beirut were closed by armed roadblocks of a half dozen different factions.

Many believe Lebanon's parliamentary and presidential elections next year are an underlying factor in the hostilities, because of Moslem demands for a greater say in government over the Christian minority.

Yet another irritant is the Palestinian guerrill apresence in Lebanon,which the right-wing Falange party considers an armed threat to Lebanese sovereignty. On their part, the Palestinian guerrilla presence in Lebanon, which the right-date" their resistance movement with too many curbs.

The various disputes erupted in street fighting last April and May, leaving 450 dead.

Political efforts to defuse the situation have failed and the Lebanese army has not been ordered to intervene.

Health Program Curbs Budget Result—Barrett

The federal government's spending curbs for medicare will ultimately force the provincial government to hold back on new health programs, Premier Barrett said Friday.

Barrett returned from England Friday "just a little bit angry" about the tightened spending dealt to the provinces in the federal budget.

"The ability of this province to pioneer new health services is now impaired," he told a press conference, responding to a new system of staggered limits to federal contributions for medicare programs dropping to 13 per cent next year.

"It will also limit B.C.'s experimental programs into new health care fields — the Liberal government has made a major mistake.

"To put it bluntly Ottawa is going to destroy a good medicare scheme by squeezing the wealthier provinces and at the same time making them pay for the less wealthy provinces."

Although Barrett said he has no argument about equalizaton payments, giving assistance to less welathy provinces like Quebec "is just plain stuppid when that province, incidentally, is wasting a few million on the Olympics. It's absurd.

"Don't let the federal politicians kid you — it (a subsidy) will come from Ottawa in the end."

Finance Minister John Turner said, in his budget speech, hospital and medical care is costing Ottawa $6 billion this year, nearly 20 per cent of the total budget.

The 13 per cent limit next year will drop to 10.5 per cent in 1977-78 and 8.5 per cent thereafter.

B.C. officials were looking forward to increased assistance from Ottawa for chronic care "and were attempting to get cost sharing for mental health care."

Ottawa, Barrett said, is destroying the traditonal patterns by the action.

B.C.'s medical care costs under the Medical Services Plan are estimated to increase from $113 million to $123 million in the current year. The total health department expenditure will be an estimated $712 million.

Other topics covered by Barrett included $200 million in British financing on the proposed $350 million oil refinery and criticism of Ottawa's increase of 15 cents in gasoline prices.

The 10 per cent excise tax, he said, is Ottawa's way of punishing the ordinary people of Canada already having a hard time coping with inflation.

"The tax should be on oil companies, not on users and the large corporations are being let off without a major increase in tax."

The provincial government will not likely take steps to lessen the burden. Barrett said the government has already been kind to motorists by providing the lowest auto insurance scheme in Canada through ICBC.

The province should be looking at 30 per cent increases in rates, "a route which we will not go, although there may be minor changes."

INDUSTRY DROPS MASTER CONTRACT

nical argument about the contract language, contrary to the understanding of the parties at the time the language was originally negotiated in 1972," Bennett said.

Viala said the union was supposed to be in negotiations with the industry "and if they ever sit down to talk to us, we'll discuss it with them.

"But we don't get excited every time a judge rules against us in arbitration," he said.

Asked if the industry's action could precipitate a walkout before the IWA and the pulp and paper unions have completed their strike votes, Viala said: "I think the boys will stay on the job until it's time."

Reg Ginn, PPWC national president, said Friday pulp unions have cancelled the contracts on a local level. He said it is a common move in the pulp and paper industry, unlike the forest industry, where it is just one more step leading to an expected strike.

He said he expects a strike to follow a strike vote which is underway among PPWC and CPU locals.

Ginn said he believes the companies are working in collusion against the British Columbia government because the companies are unhappy with stumpage rates and anti-pollution laws imposed by the government.

"So if they force us into a strike situation, the economy of the province is going to suffer and people are going to take a long look at the NDP government next time they go to the polls," he said.

Hostage, Con on Floor After Shooting in Vault

the exit of the building toward a trailer where a tactical squad was stationed and ran up some steps to the door of the trailer.

"I shouted 'hit it' and turned around and ran straight back to the Dutch door." Mr. Hudson then jumped up on a chair outside the Dutch door and had a full view inside.

"I saw Lucas positioned on the right hand side of the vault door. The door appeared to be closed. He was wielding a knife and shouting obscenities.

"Lucas was facing toward me. I could see his face clearly—blood was coming down the forehead of his face.

"Bruce was positioned to the left of the vault door facing toward me. He was holding Mary with one arm around her.

"My impression was it was his left arm (holding her). Her head was slumped down. I couldn't see her face. He appeared to be holding her up.

In his other arm was a knife held six inches from Miss Steinhauser, Mr. Hudson testified.

'He shouted 'I'll kill her.' I shouted 'Don't make it worse Andy, cool it.'"

"At this time I thought Andy was going to stab Mary. "Then a window smashed to my left. Somebody shouted 'freeze' and the shooting started. Everything then happened so fast. I saw Lucas go down immediately. I figured he had been shot."

"Almost straight after I saw blood coming from Andy Bruce's face, I saw he and Mary go down."

Mr. Hudson said the action took place so fast that he could not remember how many shots were fired, or how many members of the tactical squad there were. He leaped over the Dutch door and unbolted it.

"I remember people going past me," he said. All I wanted to do was to get over where Mary was."

"By this time Lucas was on his feet. There appeared to be a struggle going on, Mary and Bruce were lying sprawled out. There was lots of blood all over the place."

Asked whether at any point in the incident he heard the words "don't shoot," Mr. Hudson said he did not and that the only word he heard was "freeze."

Prisoners 100 yards away, in affidavits released outside the inquiry Thursday, say they heard Miss Steinhauser shout 'don't shoot" twice.

The affidavits were released by an organization called the Prisoner's Union Committee.

AN OLD MINING SITE DOESN'T HAVE TO BE AN EYESORE

When you visit Barkerville today, it's hard to imagine that this was once the biggest city west of Chicago and north of San Francisco. But that's the way it was in the 1860's when Barkerville had a population of roughly 60,000 and fortunes were made in the gold claims of Williams Creek. This was the centre of the famed Cariboo gold rush... and it was the dash for gold that brought about construction of the first road to the interior. Recognizing the historic importance of Barkerville, our provincial government carried out a complete restoration of the old gold rush rown during the 1950's... and while the raucous atmosphere of a frontier mining town can never be fully re-created, there's endless fascination in exploring the buildings stocked with relics from our early days.

There are many mining towns around British Columbia... less colorful, perhaps, but just as important in their own way. Towns such as Sparwood, Merritt, Kimberley and Fraser Lake, whose economies depend on the jobs and payrolls generated by mining activity. For over a hundred years, mining has been a vital part of the life of this province. Recent legislation has hampered mining exploration and development, but our industry hopes to continue in its role as a major source of employment and tax revenue for all of British Columbia.

UVic Fund Boost By Maltwood Sale?

Manager of the University of Victoria's Maltwood Museum has suggested the museum building on west Saanich Rd. and the Pat Bay Highway be sold.

The move would give UVic money it needs for a proposed performing arts auditorium and at the same time ensure the life of the museum's deteriorating historic art collection, Maltwood Management Committee chairman Dr, Steve Jennings told UVic board members Thursday.

"However, we are not able to sell Maltwood Museum now," Jennings said Friday, adding the possibility of its sale has never before been proposed.

A will which bequeathed the 7.7 acres of land and former residence of Katharine Maltwood and her husband to the University of B.C., and UVic afterwards, strictly said the property must be used for collection of historic art and cared for by a curator, he said.

"Under the terms of the will it must remain a museum. But we'd like to get a judge of the Supreme Court to say we can alter the terms of the will," said Jennings.

"What we want to do is bring the museum to the university.

"The building itself is totally inadequate as a museum. There is no protection against the sun and no control of humidity. The collection, which has some very valuable pieces in it, is deteriorating."

Although Maltwood is usually open all summer it will be closed this year for restoration of some of the damaged art works, said a museum spokesman.

Jennings mentioned that valuable Chinese prints have become sun-damaged in the museum.

University bursar Robert McQueen, also on the management committee, agreed the possibility of the building's sale should be looked into.

He stressed the process would be a long one and no decisions on it have yet been made.

UVic's board of governors, the Maltwood's trustee, would make any such decision, said Jennings.

The former Maltwood residential estate was willed to UBC when Katharine Maltwood died in 1961 leaving her husband to live his last days there.

RCMP CHARGE 2 IN HEROIN BUST

VANCOUVER (UPI) — Two men were charged today with conspiracy to import heroin after a raid by RCMP turned up four pounds of the drug with an estimated street value of $2,688,000.

An RCMP spokesman said the two men, Shian Sih Wu, 42, of Taipei — also known as Sin Lap Ng and Ho Lin Ng — and Mei See Cheung, 21, of Hong Kong —also known as Petty Paulona Cheung — were arrested Friday night after a month-long investigation by the drug squad and local immigration authorities.

Both Wu and Cheung were charged with conspiracy to import heroin. Wu also was charged with trafficiking in the drug, the spokesman said.

The spokesman declined to provide details of the seizure of the four pounds of uncut heroin.

The two men will be arraigned in provincial court Sunday and remanded in Custody until a date is set for the preliminary hearing, the spokesman said.

$25,000 Invested In Recreation Firm

PORT ALBERNI — The city of Port Alberni has invested $25,000 in common shares in the newly-formed Arrowsmith Recreation Co. Ltd., developer of the Arrowsmith ski facility.

Council was equally divided on whether or not to undertake the investment, which must be borrowed by the city against 1976 taxes. Only the mayor's vote in favor broke the deadlock.

Opponents of the share purchase contended that current economic conditions did not justify the committing of a further expenditure which did not directly benefit the taxpayers of the city.

Earlier, this year, the company had requested a loan from the city as it had until the ened of June to raise the $160,000 required to meet its initial financial obligations.

The city's investment brought the new investment to about $65,000, without the conversion of previous loans to shares, due to take place before July 12.

When this conversion is fully completed, according to Joe Van Bergen, president of the company, about $250,000 in total capital will be realized, sufficient to pay off all outstanding loans and assure continuation of the works on the development this summer.

Timber Licence Buy Set

The provincial government has agreed to purchase a special timber licence at Lost Lake from L and E lumber Ltd. for $5,000, Recreation Minister Jack Radford said Friday.

The licence is within the boundaries of a proposed 650-acre provincial park, located in a secluded valley near the community al Alta Lake north of Vancouver.

Radford said the offer accepted by the company was slightly more than a third of the estimated value placed on the timber rights by the B.C. forest service.

He said the company supported the Lost Lake Park and had not logged the area since the parks branch announced its park proposal.

KIDNAP FAMILY 'PIGS'

MONTREAL (CP) — A letter purported to be from the kidnappers of Lena Blanchet, wife of a wealthy Quebec industrialist, describes the Blanchet family as "pigs" for not meeting ransom demands.

"The working class of Quebec is going to see how those who have money prefer money more than their parents," said the letter published today on the front page of the tabloid Journa de Montreal.

The letter said the Sherbrooke, Que., family owns hundreds of thousands of dollars in cars, land and properties yet "you refuse to give less than what the government gave you in grants taxed from the poor."

Police would not confirm the authenticity of the letter which is being examined by authorities. A police spokesman would not say whether a tape recording of Mrs. Blanchet's voice had been received.

Mrs. Blanchet, who is being held for $1-million ransom, was abducted Tuesday from her family home in the suburb of Rock Forest near Sherbrooke.

Five Export Permits for Hydro

OTTAWA (CP) — Licences to export electricity — which were trimmed from original requests — were issued Friday to British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority and Canadian Niagara Power Co. Ltd.

The licences issued by the National Energy Board cover four- to five-year periods and involve renewals of existing licences.

The B.C. Hydro licences cover sales to Point Roberts, a residential area in the U.S. south of Vancouver, and to the Bonneville power administration.

There were five separate permits for B.C. Hydro covering the period between July 1 and Sept. 30, 1979.

—Export to Point Roberts, which can be reached by land only through Canada, of 25 million kilowatthours a year for Puget Sound Power and Light Co. Initial monthly price will be $3.70 per kilowatt for the first 2,000 kilowatts and $4.25 per kilowatt for the balance. This was the only licence request not changed.

—Export of up to 2,000 million kilowatthours a year, or 65 per cent of surplus available on the B.C. Hydro system, to Bonneville Power. This surplus is to be sold in blocks of power and each transaction must be approved in advance by the energy board.

This licence is tied to export of so-called interruptible power — supplies which can be curtailed if needed for domestic markets. The company had asked to export 9,000 million kilowatthours of interruptible power a year and this request was divided in two, resulting in the licence for up to 2,000 million kilowatthours a year with prior board approval for individual transactions.

—Export of varying quantities of interruptible power through Sept. 30, 1979, with limits including the 2,000 million kilowatthours annually outlined above. The maximums are 3,400 million kilowatthours in 1974-75; 3,600 million kilowatthours in 1975-76; 7,200 million kilowatthours in 1976-77; 6,499 in 1977-78; and 4,800 in 1978-79.

—Export of 1,500 million kilowatthours in 1975-76 and 1,000 million kilowatthours in subsequent years of power which is to be returned to Canada at another location. The company had asked for 1,500 million kilowatthours each year.

—Export of up to 800 million kilowatthours through a trade agreement with Bonneville Power involving transfers at peak power periods. The company had asked for 2,000 million kilowatthours.

More Help for Multi-Nationals

Central to Finance Minister John Turner's lacklustre budget was an increase in the domestic price of oil from $6.50 to $8 per barrel. Not that Ottawa needed a budget to effect what was thought an inevitable measure.

But the rationale for the price increase has always been to encourage oil companies to explore for new petroleum sources. Even if the companies needed more revenue—a fact that is not borne out by their profit statements—governments in Ottawa and the oil-producing provinces could help by reducing taxation and royalty rates. To some extent this was done earlier this year when Ottawa and Alberta reduced combined taxation by $230 million. Increased oil and gas prices plus new production write-offs have not satisfied the oil producers but it has at least mollified them for the time being.

Perhaps the industry spokesmen are correct when they call Ottawa's gestures a mere drop in the bucket. The National Energy Board tells us we may have to spend upwards of $100 billion during the next decade on energy development. Given this information, should we keep trying to appease these large, mostly foreign-owned corporations, in order that they may control our national energy resources? Canadians have no say in how these tax benefits are used or invested. The country has no assurances that the companies will develop the right kinds of energy.

It is ironic to note that while the government is encouraging the petroleum industry to explore for more oil, it has cut $350 million from Petro-Canada's exploration budget. Only a few days after Ottawa increased petroleum exports to the U.S. by 250,000 barrels per day—despite an announced policy that these exports would be slowly phased out—Alberta announced its conventional petroleum sources would not meet demand in 13 years. Yet Petro-Canada gets the chop on exploratory activity while higher oil prices and new write-offs are lavished on the multi-national companies. It doesn't make sense.

At the base of the trouble is the lack of a comprehensive national energy policy. We don't even have a complete inventory of our real and potential energy supplies. This fact alone puts the government in a position of weakness when dealing with the petroleum companies. They know more than the government—a fact that shows whenever Ottawa adds another ad hoc patch to its wobbly resource taxation policies.

Just as the government refuses to make any hard and fast decisions about the economy as a whole, neither will it do anything about ensuring control of the country's future energy supplies. A national energy policy is essential for Canada's future. Ottawa should get with it before it runs out of ragged patches.

Just the Facts, Please

Perhaps now that Premier Dave Barrett has returned in triumph with a signed agreement from Sim-Chem Ltd., the British oil refinery engineers, to provide expertise for the provincial government petrochemical complex he wants to build in British Columbia, his administration finally feels secure enough to release the environmental impact reports on the Fraser Valley site and the economic feasibility studies done by the government's consultants.

They were prepared early this year by the B.C. Petroleum Corporation and outside firms. Barrett and his colleagues have had them on their desks for months. He himself said in April: "We want rational, thoughtful public participation..."

He also said a proposed Roberts Bank site was ruled out on environmental grounds, and that economic studies show it is not only feasible to build a provincial government refinery "but essential for B.C."

Well that's on his say-so alone. Premier Barrett and his administration are responsive on other issues. We must assume he is sincere when he says no refinery will be built if local authorities oppose it and when he says he wants rational and thoughtful public debate.

But the present cloak of secrecy around the proposal leaves the government with all the cards. It can give us selective tidbits of information about the environmental standards of such a refinery and its economic feasibility. It has already begun the snow job. As far as provincial oil refineries go, there isn't much evidence of "free and open government" promised by the NDP.

This is a lecture, not a debate. Unless the provincial government is willing to take the public into its confidence—and very soon—then it should be prepared for a firestorm of protest from angry, ignored citizens who should have been let in on the deal long ago. The government should place all its reports and studies on the table. Now.

Instant Ego Trip—Think Small

CALGARY — Anybody out there interested in an all-wool, yard wide, authenticated, attested and guaranteed wave of the future ego trip? Trade in your nearly new Detroit behemoth on a 1975 compact car! Take the word of a guy who did it and picked up a superiority complex a foot thick!

It is not the kind of trade any self-respecting car peddler likes to make. By inclination, trading and money thirst, they are geared to up-grading the size of cars their customers drive. They delight in trading customers out of compacts into Chryslers, Cadillacs and Continentals. The only people who would ordinarily be caught dead trading down in car size would be brokers on their uppers. That was until the day before yesterday.

In this age of energy crises and the impending Canadian shortage of fossil fuels, it is the reverse trade, the luxury car for the compact that produces the warm-all-over glow that can last for weeks. What a great thing it is to do!

Detroit Monsters

Like every other clean-living Canadian boy who grew to manhood during the maturing of the automobile age, I worshipped devoutly at the Detroit shrine. Driving the latest model Detroit monster was my idea of the perfect status symbol. In my lifetime I moved from fourth-hand clunkers to nearly new demonstrators, to actual new bottom-of-the-liners. Then onward and upward into station wagons, convertibles, top of the standard lines and into the bottom-of-the-line luxury models.

I never quite made it up to the Eldorado, Continental or Le Baron, but there is no doubt one of them qualified as a dream ambition. It did until a couple of months ago when lightning struck on the road to Edmonton.

What in the name of common sense, the lightning asked, were we all doing driving around in cars that weighed twice too much, cost twice too much and used twice as much fuel as anybody could justify?

Never mind about the "everybody." What was I doing in such a car, save ensuring that there would be no gasoline for my grandchildren a couple of decades from now?

It is one thing to recognize a condition and something else again to do something about it. But that lightning kept striking back every time I forked over $11 for a tank of gas at a gas pump. The gas pump seemed to be gurgling "get rid of it, get rid of it, get rid of it" like a hic-coughing bullfrog.

Soon I was counting the over-sized gas hogs that passed me on the road at 85 miles an hour. I counted the numbers of one-passenger cars coming and going and they seemed to exceed 85 per cent of the cars on the road. The pleasure of driving a Detroit luxury model evaporated.

Ultimately I crossed the Rubicon into my dealer's showroom and did the deal. Not, it is true, for the bottom of the line sub-sub compact that goes 30 miles to the gallon. Having become accustomed to luxury, you don't quit cold turkey. But I did settle for a gussied-up compact that gets me 20 miles to the gallon in the city and 25 miles on the highway.

AUTOMOBILES
. . . joys of compact cars

I now get left at light changes by lead-footed gas wasters who floor their accelerator pedals. And boy does that make me feel good! Nothing does more for your ego than contemplating the exhaust of the rubber burners.

The truth is that luxury drivers who voluntarily come down to compacts quickly become Pharisees who joyously spend their hours behind the wheel being thankful that they are not as other men.

One point needs emphasizing. It is not driving a compact that makes the difference. It is in being able to afford a luxury car and driving a compact. That, of course, includes just about everybody in our part of the country at the moment.

Where we once preened ourselves beside our Detroit behemoths, we now lie in ambush for friends to lure into having a ride in our new compact. Once we paid no attention to the mileage we got on 80-mile-an-hour safaris. Now we make it a point of knowing, and bragging about, our mileage down to the last decimal point.

Once we made the switch we discovered we had all unknowingly latched onto a wave of the future. All kinds of people have been doing the same thing. And we have a new goal in life — to shame our friends into abandoning their own wasteful ways and follow our patriotic examples. We have a litany well devised to embarrass our Detroit loyalist friend:

Self-Righteous Wallow

"It is just that I couldn't feel comfortable with myself being such a gas-waster in an energy short world."

Mostly, they are not easily moved. But, we tell ourselves, they'll remember us every time they stop at a gas pump. Yet there is a lot more to it than saving money. After all, the cost of down trading is horrendous. It will take us years to save on gas what we lost on the switch in cars. But there is our sure knowledge that we have the solution to the world's energy shortage. We tell ourselves we are the living solutions.

Does Premier Davis of Ontario have nightmares about the economic consequences of increased gasoline price? No problem. He could cut gasoline consumption in Ontario in half by closing the streets and highways to all but compact cars and Detroit behemoths carrying a minimum of four passengers.

That would be the death knell of our ego trip, of course. No longer would we be able to feel superior to the drivers of Cadillacs, Chryslers and Lincolns. But until that happens on some distant tomorrow, there is nothing like the self-righteousness wallow trading down to a compact can produce. Peace, it's wonderful! Hallelujah and Amen!

EDITOR'S NOTEBOOK

We Need a Watchdog To Maintain the Right

On a beautiful day last May 1, I stood on the legislature steps watching an Indian demonstration demanding the return of native lands.

The demonstrators, who were mostly kids, held placards aloft, chanted to the beat of tom-toms and listened to speeches. Tourists gawked and bored television crews dutifully recorded the event for the evening news.

One cameraman stood out like the devil at a church picnic, though. He sported jacket, tie and a haircut that would make an army seargeant-major smile.

Now most of the local television cameramen are known to me. They are an independent lot who don't favor jackets or ties when they are carrying 30 or more pounds of camera on their shoulders.

So I asked one television man of my acquaintance who the new man was.

"He says he's from fish and wildlife," my acquaintance said, smiling sardonically.

We both knew the impeccable cameraman was probably an RCMP agent.

The incident came to mind this week when I picked up a U.S. news magazine showing a drawing of a Central Intelligence Agency man snapping pictures of Washington anti-war demonstrators.

To compare the RCMP and the CIA is probably unfair. I say "probably" because we don't know all the activities of the 16,000-man force. Other than the courteous officers who patrol our provincial highways or those squads responsible for the enforcement of federal drug laws, one hears very little about the assignments of this para military force.

The RCMP is ultimately responsible to the solicitor-general of Canada. It is controlled or managed by a commissioner who holds the rank and status of a federal deputy minister. Yet other than the brief resume contained in the Canada Yearbook, Canadians know little about their national police force or its mysterious security and intelligence division.

While 10 of the 19 pages in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act are devoted to the discipline of officers the potential for misuse of the tightly controlled force should not be overlooked.

Even the Mounties themselves are fed up with internal conditions, judging by the fact that 4,000 of them—one-quarter of the force—attended meetings across the country this year to discuss formation of a collective bargaining association.

Did you know that an officer who up and walks away from his job can be charged with desertion "before the termination of his period of engagement?". Is this a police force or the army?

The answer is self evident, and like the army, the RCMP is used as an arm of national political policy. In the past it has been used to break strikes. During the implementation of the War Measures Act the force was used for political ends even in cozy Victoria.

Two polite RCMP officers walked into this newspaper in that long-gone October to request a copy of a letter to the editor which sympathized with some FLQ aims.

They didn't get it, of course. If this newspaper supplied the police with copies of our correspondence, including names and addresses we would have few letter-writers.

Yet the incident shows how easily freedoms we take for granted can be eroded. The RCMP cannot be faulted; they were only enforcing the law. But without the checks and balances of a democratic society it is easy to see how a police force can become a political tool.

It has happened in the United States. It has happened here.

Even the Rockefeller commission, following its shallow investigation into the CIA, recommended that congress establish a joint committee to supervise the agency's operations. It also said at least part of the CIA budget should be made public to eliminate secrecy, one of the underlying problems confronting the CIA, in the commission's opinion.

Secrecy in the RCMP is a way of life. The public accounts lists forces expenditures under a few cursory headings including law enforcement program, pensions and federal court awards. A detailed breakdown of how the RCMP spent more than $165 million in 1973-74 is not listed.

Other than the solicitor-general, no elected persons have any supervisory role over this very powerful institution in Canadian society. The U.S. example proves that we should have. Why not an all-party committee or another independent body to oversee RCMP operations and expenditures? At least the public would have one check on misuse of power. At present the force is a servant of government first, the people second.

Freedom of assembly and the right to privacy of those Indian kids were shadowed by the presence of that anonymous cameraman last May 1. Perhaps he had reason to be there. Perhaps some revolutionary U.S. Indians organized the demonstration and the RCMP needed pictures of them for their files. Perhaps. Such incidents will always be speculative if we don't have some control over the RCMP through a public body that will answer questions about the force's activities. Maintain the right should mean just that.—G.R.O.

A Nature Ramble With Skipper

By Freeman King

For an hour's interesting ramble, go out to Goldstream park picnic site, park your car and take a walk around the area.

As you walk along you will spot some hazel nut trees. Examine them and see if you can spot the new hazel nuts in their green and woolly stockings. They won't be ripe until later on in July. Then they are left alone for the squirrels to collect and store for their winter food.

Now cross the pavement and take a look at three very old cottonwood trees. They are about four or five hundred years old. Look around on the ground and you will see why they are called cottonwood trees. You will see many of their long strings of seeds covered with a fluffy substance that looks a lot like cotton.

Go in close to the trees and examine their bark. It is thick and full of cracks. There you will find spiders. The bark of cottonwoods does not look like that of the aspen family — to which the cottonwood belongs. Here be sure to pick up some of its yellowish leaves from the ground. Crush them in your hands and then smell them. The leaves give off a very nice odor and in the early spring when the leaves break out, the trees smell like balm of Gilead.

Now as you walk back along the trail by the river, you will see many salmon berries in fruit. But if you want to taste one be sure it is bright red or yellow. I think you will have to be there early in the morning too, or the robins will take care of the picking for you.

Here you can also find thimble berries in bloom with their bright white flowers and single leaves. The salmon berry bush has three leaflets, while the thimble berry's is thick, like blotting paper.

Now if you look close to the ground, you will find the wild ginger. Its heart-shaped leaves generally occur in patches formed by their creeping habit. Two from each node and some of them may arise from each node and some of them may be six inches long and three inches across. It is a curious flower, a purplish brown, and it grows singly and close to the ground and hides under the leaves.

It is bell-like with three wide-spreading lobes about three inches wide. If you crush a leaf it smells like ginger. This is a very curious flower and I often wonder just where it fits into the environment.

Now we are back to where the old cedar stump is. Take a look on the wood and see in years gone by where the bark beetle worked under the surface of the bark and created the many wavy lines that we often call etching.

Civilian Help

This is to express my sincere appreciation to the many civilians who involved themselves with the members of our department at the life and fire emergency at the Royal Olympic hotel.

The voluntary efforts of these nameless civilians was most helpful, particularly in the early moments of our rescue and fire fighting tactics.

Also to the people who thoughtfully provided coffee and soft drinks.

In conclusion, may I say on behalf of assistant fire chief M. Belton, and the officers and members of his shift, a very special thank you to all of you who made the task a little easier. — ERIC SIMMONS, Fire Chief, City of Victoria.

Seagull Perfect Bird

British Columbia could not choose a more beautiful bird than the seagull to represent the province.

It is a joy to watch its sheer perfection of motion in flight. Soaring over the highest buildings and the tallest trees, circling, and at times staying its flight only to change its course and away it soars in such pure motion it is a joy to watch.

I have heard that when or if the seagull disappears from the earth, man also will become extinct. — Kathleen English, 740 Burdett Street.

Nutrition in Schools

I was delighted to read in the June 17 Times that vending machines in Greater Victoria high schools will carry nothing but nutritional foods and beverages as of Sept. 1.

I hope home economic courses, kindergarten snacks and cupcake sales will be acted upon next. Perhaps the savings in illness and behavior problems will spur the other school boards to follow suit.

Trustee Susan Brice asked if cheese and crackers pass this nutritional test. Please inform her and your readers (parents) that it depends on the cheese and it depends on the crackers!

If all the nutrients are refined out so the product has a long shelf life it isn't nutritional and is a "dead" food. It should only be fed to "dead" people!

Hundreds of medical doctors treat learning disabilities, retarded and even mongoloid children with food that is "alive" plus extra nutrients. I'm glad the school trustees are reading the research. — Helen Butler, 8098, East Saanich Road.

U.S. Trying to Sink Law of Sea Agreement?

By ANTHONY TUCKER
Manchester Guardian

A whole new technological arena for skirmish and debate between the great powers is emerging from the CIA's deep-sea escapade involving the pseudo scientific research vessel Glomar Explorer and the recovery of a Russian submarine.

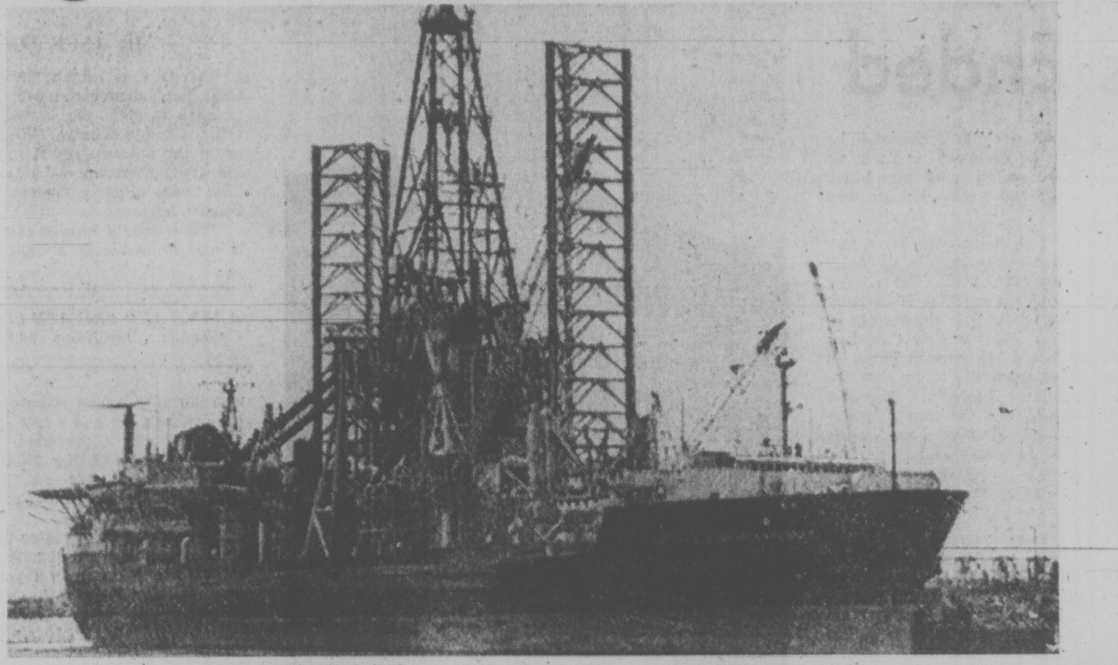
Although the latest documents revealing CIA activities add little to the original stories, the curious way in which the CIA seems to have played a planned role in blowing the cover at a crucial time in the Law of the Sea debate deserves more attention than it has so far received.

Not only did the involvement of a so-called research vessel in espionage activities decisively undermine negotiations toward unfettered scientific research at the Law of the Sea conference, but it also revealed practical progress in marine technologies which confirms that America is comfortably ahead of the world in deep-sea exploration and exploitation capability.

Any factor tending to disrupt the attainment of general agreement about sea-bed exploitation — and this year's Law of the Sea conference revealed fundamental disagreements about seabed rights — may also tend to increase the strength of the large maritime nations who want to keep as much as possible for themselves.

In the background are major commercial mining interests — especially in the U.S. — which would be happy to see a free-for-all if the Law of the Sea debate should founder.

They certainly do not want stringent international controls; the question arises whether CIA and exploitation industries are not, in this issue, hand in glove.



GLOMAR EXPLORER . . . pushing limits of undersea technology

The CIA is reported to have "engendered" the reports that the Glomar Explorer pushed the limits of engineering and technology almost as far as Project Apollo, and the description of the ship as revolutionary and capable of reaching "unheard of ocean depths."

In fact, the vessel appears to have utilized techniques developed initially for the ill-fated ultra-deep drilling scientific experiment known as the Mohole Project and which has been exploited and embodied in other specialist deep-sea search and recovery systems.

The U.S. engineering firm, which produced the Mohole design also proposed a recovery system back in 1973 which was aimed at lifting rocket warheads (Russian) from the ocean floor, at depths up to 20,000 ft. The Russian submarine fragment is reported to have been lifted from 16,500 ft.

There are enormous difficulties in locating objects at such great depths, and serious but less difficult problems in holding a recovery ship in a precise position for long periods. Position holding accuracy of 20 feet is claimed by some U.S. systems.

But the CIA-based description of the Glomar Explorer escapade give an accuracy of 50 ft.

Yet the technique of recovery from great depths, providing it can be coupled with highly sensitive searching techniques — and there are signs that these are over the horizon as far as magnetic metals are concerned — is of obvious and enormous interest to the military.

Apart from unravelling the mysterious losses of the U.S. nuclear submarines Thresher (1963) and Scorpion (1968), there must be pressure for the U.S. to recover the two other Russian submarines lost in the Atlantic in the last five years.

Where Secrecy Presides Over Everything

BREZHNEV . . . private life shielded

MOSCOW — When Leonid Brezhnev dropped from public view in his most recent month-long absence, a few foreign embassies here were privately tipped off that the Soviet party chief would be undergoing what was described as minor medical treatment.

The rare disclosure was mostly meant to forestall the sort of speculation that circulated in the West when Mr. Brezhnev was out ill last winter. The diplomats were more fortunate than the average Russian, who was told nothing. When Mr. Brezhnev greeted a delegation of visiting Czech communists on Soviet television, his public re-emergence was treated as if he had never been away from his desk.

The incident reflects the Soviet passion for secrecy that extends far beyond a prudent concern for the private lives of the top leadership. In the Soviet Union, the public is told only what the communist party has decided it needs to know. No explanations are felt to be necessary. Soviet censorship policy forbids the official press to report on the personal health and habits of the men who run the Kremlin, or even to take note of their daily activities unless it involves some official occasion. The Soviet leaders tolerate no press conferences and when the ruling Politburo meets, it is invariably in secret.

Foreign diplomats see several reasons for this. The Soviet political system is rooted in the Communist party leadership's claim to infallibility, one Western political analyst notes, and too much publicity could open this claim to question. The practical details of how the party rules are concealed in propaganda that incessantly hails the wisdom and foresight of Brezhnev and his associates.

Beyond this are other real concerns. The men in the Kremlin are aging. The 15 full members of the Politburo average almost 66 years and they are reportedly given almost fulltime medical supervision. When 71-year-old Premier Aleksei Kosygin visited Libya and Tunisia last month, one Arab source reported that a physician stood by with a stopwatch carefully limiting the duration of Mr. Kosygin's morning swim.

The Kremlin feels it necessary to conceal this medical preoccupation, one Western diplomat believes, so that public confidence in the durability of the leadership will not be undermined. According to one Soviet source, it was Western news reports about Brezhnev's illness last winter that prompted some subordinates to look to his rival Aleksandr Shelepin, prompting the trade union chief's ouster from the Politburo this spring and his final fall into disgrace.

The taboos on what is news in the Soviet Union run well beyond the private lives in the Kremlin to encompass anything that can be construed in the national interest. Understandably, subjects such as weapons development programs or Soviet military aid abroad are not discussed publicly. But the secrecy extends to domestic disasters, probably because they detract from the image of communism as bringing unalloyed happiness. When one train slammed into another in Lithuania this spring, with apparently considerable loss of life, it was not officially disclosed.

While crimes, fires and crashes are usually ignored at home, if they happen in the West the Soviet press circulates them as an object lesson on the miserable quality of Western life. One week last spring, there were separate Soviet and American airliner crashes. The American crash in the South Pacific was reported by the Tass press agency. The Soviet crash in Leningrad was not.

One result here has been a thriving market in rumors — sometimes prefaced with the wry caveat, "odna babushka skazala . . ." ("one grandmother said . . ."). Though the Kremlin never really told the Soviet public that Mr. Brezhnev was ill last winter, reports of cancer and other illnesses still flew about during his seven-week absence. Last fall, one rumor swept the capital that a horde of convicts had escaped from a prison train and was descending on Moscow. Denials by police only fanned the story, many Muscovites reasoning that authorities would not bother to deny the rumor if it were not true.

Though most Russians accept the fact that their news is selected, some of the more educated have their own systems for getting fuller information. When some American newsmen visited a Russian provincial town not long ago, the local newspaper editor lectured them on the morals of the Watergate affair, which was barely reported by the Soviet press. Asked where he got his facts, the editor replied rather sheepishly: "I listen to the Voice of America." One university student here boasted: "I find out what's happening by reading between the lines."

Why Moscow persists in such secrecy, even in the face of calls for more openness at the European security talks in Geneva, is a continuing topic for debate in diplomatic quarters here. But there seems to be some consensus that the commitment to a closed society goes well beyond the tenets of Marxist-Leninist ideology or the requirements of the modern Soviet state.

"In Russia secrecy presides over everything: secrecy — administrative, political, social; discretion — useful and useless; silence — superfluous for assuring necessary security," a French visitor once noted. The Marquis de Custine made his observation in 1839.

DEMONIC WEAPON

THE NATION

Henry Kissinger and Gerald Ford may plead for their own amnesty from accountability, but the national inquiry compelled by the war in Indochina has begun. We are still absorbing the knowledge of atrocities committed in our name. Recent reports from Agence France Presse, Le Monde, the Associated Press and Reuters have placed yet another demonic weapon in America's recent Indochinese arsenal: the CBU-55.

Listed in Navy literature, the CBU-55 seems the most developed of the cluster bombs, those fragmenting carriers of destructive pellets which for years riddled the bodies of Indochinese. According to what seem to be reliable reports, the CBU-55 was used in Vietnam by the Navy as early as 1970, in Cambodia by Lon Nol's troops beginning this past January, as late as mid-April by the Thieu regime against insurgents at Xuan Loc.

Its identifying feature: a flammable aerosol cloud that, after an explosion and shock wave that can break eardrums and collapse lungs, sets off a flash fire evidently designed to attack those lungs still functioning, first searing and then suffocating them by robbing the air of its oxygen within a 100-yard radius.

American pilots reportedly dropped CBU-55s on rebel troops during the Thieu regime's invasion of Laos. Lon Nol's pilots reportedly used it on the banks of the Mekong River to blaze a way for convoys bound for Phnom Penh.

The CBU-55 joins herbicides, defoliation and napalm as part of the American Indochinese legacy. Authorization of their development and use warrants serious examination of the country's standards of tolerable behavior. Recognition of their massive deployment betrays the ugly hypocrisy behind the Kissinger-Ford pose of righteousness over real or fabricated reports of postwar Indochinese killings, so casually labeled "blood bath" and so directly a consequence of American policy and tactics.

The Peregrines And the Poachers

STRAY FEATHERS
harold hosford

When it comes to Peregrine Falcons, I'm a little like Will Rogers; all I know is what I read in the newspapers. Well, not quite! I've read a couple of books too.

What I'm trying to say is that aside from a half-dozen fleeting glimpses of these almost-legendary birds in flight, and a memorable day when I saw one swoop at a wigeon over Esquimalt Lagoon, my practical experience with Peregrins is only slightly more extensive than my experience with Great Auks and Carolina Parakeets.

Despite this, I can still get up a pretty fair head of steam when I sense what I take to be a threat to the existence of Peregrines as a species. And recent news out of the Queen Charlottes has my pressure rising.

According to the B.C. Fish and Wildlife Branch, the Queen Charlotte Peregrines — they're a dark marine race known as Peale's Falcon — are in a slump; not only are their numbers down but fewer nest sites are being occupied — and this usually means fewer birds are being born. Whether the drop in numbers represents only a temporary setback or is the beginning of a trend no one is prepared to say.

Numbers dwindling

But the Wildlife Branch isn't waiting to find out; they've put a freeze on any further taking of young falcons for propagation projects or falconry this year.

There is a second, and to me more sinister, element to the Queen Charlotte Peregrine story — poaching. Apparently young Peregrines continue to be taken by poachers who, with the impetus of the reputedly fabulous black-market prices being offered for the birds, are determined to get their piece of the action.

Where the birds go once they're captured is pure speculation but with the kind of money being offered it isn't hard to guess.

To fully appreciate the ends to which falcon poachers will go, and the difficulties involved in effectively curbing their activities, one has only to visit the Peregrine nesting grounds on the Queen Charlottes.

Here I must resort to second-hand evidence but most people who have been there agree that the birds nest in some of the wildest, most inaccessible parts of the Islands — places where only the most determined poacher would venture, places where the rewards for success must be extremely high to outweigh the potential cost, both physical and monetary, of poaching, and places where only continuous, and costly, patrols during the nesting season could hope to cut into the poacher's take.

But why all this concern for a few falcons? Can't the Peregrines afford a few of their young each year without affecting their future as a species? There is good evidence that says they can and on the basis of this evidence, and regular surveys of the Peregrine population, the Wildlife Branch sets limits on how many young birds may be taken each year. Unfortunately, these limits cannot always take into account the work of the poachers.

The result is that, instead of just the five or so birds legally allowed, there is an unknown additional take by the poachers; soon the population begins to reflect this take, their numbers drop, and the season is closed.

I think it fair to say that unscrupulous falconers either actively engaged in poaching or support the poachers with tempting offers for the birds they take. And, strangely, next to the falcons, it will be falconers themselves who stand to lose the most if the Peregrines fail.

Without some kind of self-regulation from within falconry groups, the falconers may find the opposition to their sport, which they have fought so long and so hard to convince about the rightness of their cause, may rise and shut the door on falconry once and for all.

I know falconers value their falcons but do they value them enough to put the poachers out of business?

Callaghan: He's Happy The Neglect Is Ended

By ROBERT MARTIN

Morley Callaghan's reputation was a little intimidating. He'd been variously described as aloof, bitter, a curmudgeon and the Grand Old Man of Canadian Literature. The image was fire-breathing and definitely larger than life. The Conqueror of Hemingway. The most unjustly neglected writer in the English language, according to critic Edmund Wilson. A monolith. A titan. A colossus.

The elderly gentleman who opened the door of his home in Toronto's Rosedale area was having trouble with his glasses and his dog. When Callaghan leaned over to stop his white poodle, Nicky, from escaping through the open door, his glasses slid down his nose. When he tried to catch his spectacles, he almost lost the dog.

The monstrous fire-breathing image quickly went up in smoke. The Conqueror went up in smoke. The Conqueror of Hemingway is short, balding and portly as befits his 72 years. With a pipe permanently attached to the right side of his mouth, a wheezy laugh and a kindly demeanor, he looked like everybody's favorite grandfather. In fact, he is one, twice over.

Callaghan lives in Rosedale but his home looks comfortable rather than elegant. Chairs and sofas had the slightly worn look of furniture that has been used for years, not just displayed.

The living room had a Calder print over the fireplace but the room was truly dominated by a dour painting by Toronto artist William Kurelek. A man lies in bed, the covers held up around his chin, while outside his window the moon shines with an unnatural light. Very mysterious. Like Callaghan.

Across the main hall, the memorabilia of a long and successful literary life clutter the library. Editions of Callaghan's books in Italian, French, Russian, Swedish and Ukrainian. Among the photographs on the walls there's a group shot of Canadian artistic heavies taken during Centennial year. Glenn Gould and Marshall McLuhan march resolutely into the future. Kate Reid gallantly supports Sir Ernest Macmillan and A. Y. Jackson, one on each arm. And, standing apart from the other five, Callaghan lights his pipe.

But then, Callaghan always has been a loner, a maverick, or at least that's how the conventional wisdom goes. The writer who made a big splash in Paris and New York in the twenties chose to return to Hogtown to settle down. He never got the recognition he felt he deserved in his home town and it made him bitter over the years. Or so they say.

"I can't complain for a moment about being neglected," Callaghan said. "All of my books are in print in Canada. Macmillan has about eight of them and the New Canadian Library has several more. In fact, the editor of the New Canadian Library, Malcolm Ross, tells me that I've displaced Stephen Leacock as their best-selling author. That's pretty remarkable because they're unyielding books.

"I sell about 40,000 to 50,000 copies a year in Canada. The books get put on courses or people discover me. It just all adds up. It's rather astonishing. I don't quite understand it myself."

What about the place of Callaghan in the canon of Canadian literature? "I haven't the slightest interest in taking my rightful place in Canadian literature. If Canadians want to read me that's fine. I'd like every Canadian to know those books, but if they don't want to, I don't give a hoot.

"You know, I was never, in the beginning, read for patriotic reasons. I started in Paris, was launched in New York and then recongized in Canada."

MORLEY CALLAGHAN . . . no complaints

PETER MURRAY-EDITOR

Callaghan is a rarity among Canadian authors in that he has manged to live off his work virtually from the beginning. "There were hard times," he said, but he had to go all the way back to 1930 to find an example. "When we came back to Toronto we came right into the middle of the Depression. There I was, a golden boy and suddenly everything blew up in my face. But in about a year and a half, we were back on our feet again."

Callaghan is proud of his independence. "I go where I want to go, I do what I want to do. I don't owe anybody any money. I can say, "to hell with you all.' The great trick in life is to get to the position where you're your own master, your own boss and not dependent on anybody. I've really acted on that pretty well all my life."

Callaghan talked while sitting at a small wooden table in a corner of his library. "This is where I wrote A Passion in Rome," he said. "It took three months." That book was published in 1962. Last Saturday, his latest effort, A Fine and Private Place, was published. It's his first in 13 years.

Callaghan denied that the intervening years had been a dry spell for him. "I've been working on three books. I have another book that I could finish up in three months. I've just finished a three-act play called Season of the Witch. My son Barry is the editor of a fine international quarterly called Exile and he's going to publish it."

Callaghan is an interesting mixture of ego and insecurity. He was very proud of his new novel—"a wild, anarchic, romantic book" he called it—and at the same time very concerned about how it would be received. "How do you think people will like it?" he asked more than once and seemed upset at the reply that probably most people would be too busy identifying the persons behind the characters to appreciate the novel's literary merits.

Still he got a huge laugh out of the reaction of a reviewer for The London Free Press who didn't like the book. "It was not a favorable review. You see, the fellow who wrote it is a young academic and, well, I made a lot of fun about graduate school and I don't think he liked it. The funny thing is, the review sounds just like something Dr. Morton Hyland would have written." Hyland is a character in A Fine and Private Place who is a particularly pompous critic.

At 72, Callaghan's body is undeniably slowing down but his mind is as sharp as ever. Asked if he would do anything differently, he said, "I could have practiced law, but there's certainly nothing I would rather be than a writer. In some sense, as I've said before, I haven't worked in years."

Callaghan, who used to travel extensively, has been kept at home for the last year because of the health problems of his wife, Loretta, to whom he has been married for 46 years. She suffered a mild stroke as the result of the strain of having two faulty pacemakers replaced in a short period of time.

Callaghan's chief diversion appears to be collecting anecdotes about people in faraway places who have discovered him. He showed off two bass wood statuettes, a gift from a woman who made a pilgrimage all the way from Los Angeles to see him after discovering his work. He delights in the telephone calls he gets from Dan Brown, a fan of his who lives in Indianapolis and writes for Field and Stream. Brown has been calling every three months or so for the past 10 years.

Callaghan seems to take more pleaasure in being discovered by people far away than by people close at home. But then, in Canada, if he were any more of an institution, he'd be cast in bronze. Despite all the nonsense of the conventional widsom, Callaghan is read and respected hereabouts and he knows it. There is no bitterness in the house on Dale Avenue.

It's Hokey Stuff

By JACK SCOTT

There's a bit of an "in" joke in Morley Callaghan's thirteenth novel.

Back in 1962, the United States' leading critic, the late Edmund Wilson, cast Callaghan in the unbecoming, if lucrative, robes of literary martyrdom by referring to him as "the most unjustly neglected writer in the English language."

This being the opinion of an outside writer it was immediately accepted by Canadians who dutifully bought more of Morley's books (though he'd not had a new one out in several years) and it preceded, too, the $15,000 Molson prize and the $50,000 Royal Bank prize which Morley got, presumably, by being around and making funnies on the radio.

A FINE AND PRIVATE PLACE by Morley Callaghan. MacMillan. $8.95.

Morley was to say later that Wilson's fulsome praise was a millstone around his neck — "People figure that if you are neglected they may as well go right on neglecting you" — but what's now so interesting about the Wilson opinion is that it forms, by and large, almost the exact background situation for A Fine and Private Place.

There is Morley, larger than life, still living in the genteel affluence of Toronto's Rosedale, still an oddly mysterious man for one so often in the public arena, at the centre of his own novel. He is, of course, thinly disguised as Eugene Shore, well known in literary circles abroad, but still largely undiscovered in his native land, and there, too, is the Wilson-like figure of Starkey Kunitz — "the internationally celebrated critic" — who claims that Shore has never been appreciated by his countrymen.

Enter Al Delaney, bearded, iconoclastic, brilliant graduate student, temporary cab driver, writing a dissertation on Norman Mailer, who becomes so obsessed with Mr. Shore's deceptively simple talents that he gives up on Mailer and turns, instead, to his new hero. How he and his girl friend, Lisa, attempt to unravel this mystery, with time out for only some mandatory hanky-panky, gives Morley his book.

As it turns out neither Al nor the reader gets much in the way of clues about what makes Shore-Callaghan run. At one point Al thinks he's got it — "Pushed to its logical conslusion, Shore's world is a world of complete anarchy. Literature — anarchism's last hurrah? We knew about that. Yet it isn't true of Shore. That's the whole damned mystery. For some mysterious reason, it's something more than anarchy. I think I know why. I think it's some kind of warmth or love he has for all his characters, big or small, a love and respect for the mystery of the dignity of their personalities."

This is, to put it charitably, somewhat obscure, but as the real-life Wilson wrote of the real-life Callaghan "Suddenly everything goes off in all the wrong directions." And so there is a dark, theatrical interlude with vengeful law and order represented by an unhappy cop as a kind of sub-plot.

All told, it is pretty hokey stuff, but the old master (he's 72 now) carries on with his customary exhuberance and delight in a dramatic situation.

If this novel, as in his longer works of the past, is curiously lacking in the episodic, disciplined scenes of his short stories that Edmund Wilson was really writing about, it nevertheless has that saving grace that comes with a born story-teller and proceeds with a pace and suspense that you'd expect from an enduring craftsman.

Morley kills himself off peremptorily about two-thirds of the way along, but he'll return in the flesh, of course, and what's more, most Canadian readers will be glad of it.

'Nothing Personal . . .'

By TORCHY ANDERSON

It is not just that Willie Hamilton, MP (West Fife) is a Labour member of the British Parliament. Willie holds no personal grudge against Elizabeth II but he has very definite objections to the whole elaborate institution of British royalty, questions its application to present day conditions, and thinks it costs hard-pressed Britons much too much.

He begins this book, the dust-cover of which pictures a tearful and somewhat bedraggled Queen on a 3½ p stamp, with an open letter to "Her Royal Highness Queen Elizabeth II . . .

MY QUEEN AND I, by Willie Hamilton. General Publishing. $12.95.

"Your Majesty, you know me solely by ill-repute. Yet I cannot recollect that I ever said a cruel or critical word against you personally . . ."

Prince Philip does get a few digs and Princess Margaret does not come off so lightly; but mainly the book is devoted to an analysis of what the royal show costs and the hidden assets of the family. The fortune accumulated by Queen Victoria is still bringing in fat returns and Hamilton rates the Queen as one of the richest women in the world. On this assumption he cannot understand why the British taxpayer has to pay such a big bill.

Willie never misses a meeting of the parliamentary committee which considers the budget for the extensive royal establishment. In that respect he finds "the Labour Party has grown too respectful and less respectable" and wishes for the days of Keir Hardy and John Burns. They said that Lloyd George got housemaid's knee from genuflecting before royalty. Ramsay MacDonald and the present leader, Wilson, have contracted the same disease. Hamilton thinks the Labour Party has gone soft, far too soft, on royalty.

As a highly inquisitive member of the parliamentary committee—not always a popular one—Hamilton has dug as deep as he could into the finances of the royal family. But, he admits, a man can only dig so far before confronting the wall of ancient privilege. Even though "ermine has turned to rabbit" in the court costumes of many nobles, the whole show is still, in Willie's opinion, far, far too extravagant.

He finds the Royal Household a loyal and secretive body, enjoying privileges both of rank and money. At the sound of a question they close ranks and take defensive positions on precedents that go back to William The Conqueror. Willie finds it a hard combination to beat.

Continuing his letter to The Queen: "You were badly advised when you declined to disclose to the 1972 Select Committee the actual extent of your wealth." Some day, he writes, the royal family will have to pay taxes on all its wealth.

Hamilton backs his arguments with all the facts available to him. Statements of revenue from the duchies of Lancaster and Cornwall and other statistical foundation for his arguments take up a considerable part of the book.

Whether you agree with Willie Hamilton or express your horror with a high Tory snort of indignation, whether you want to horsewhip him or join him, you should read this book.

It will help you argue your case, either for Buckingham Palace or the slums of Glasgow.

We're Smeared By Same Brush

By PAT BARCLAY

A Canadian, runs the continentalist argument, is really only an American in low gear. (By "continentalist", it should be pointed out, I mean the sort of person who views the inhabitants of this continent as one big relatively happy family which could easily become still happier if only certain members of it were more unselfish.) A single word dropped into a pool of conversation can sometimes be enough to identify the assumptions and allegiances of the man or woman who utters it; in the case of the continentalist, that word is "yet".

"Canada's crime and violence problems are not as bad as in the United States . . . yet," they will say, or "Our divorce rate still hasn't caught up to theirs yet," or —well, you name it, the continentalist-at-heart is ever ready with that qualifying "yet".

And sometimes, of course, he's proven right in the end. We do share many things in common with the Americans and some of them, like freedom of speech and Big Macs, are even good. (I wanted to put in a controversial bit to liven up the column this week, so I thought I'd mention that I liked Big Macs.)

Distinguishing "us" from "them" is made all the more difficult because many of "us" seem to share "their" values, including less than admirable ones such as profit comes first—before friendship, say, or an untarnished conscience; bigger is better, and an accumulation of many facts has more educative value than learning how to think.

Canadians are often accused of sounding smug or self-righteous when they try to point out the differences between themselves and Americans, and quite right, too. If we're going to make value comparisons, it's better to begin with a healthy bias in our own favor. For example, if a man gets involved in an argument over which is preferable, apples or oranges, and he also happens to be the owner of an apple orchard, which side is he going to be on? (Unless, of course, he has a sideline in sour grapes.)

Personally, I tend to feel that the main difference between us and the Americans is simply that we are different. Like apples and oranges. Or like the Scots and the English, or like the Danes and the Germans, or like any two groups with enough in common to allow comparisons between them, and enough dissimilarities to keep them steadfastly apart.

That's why I'm annoyed at John Crispo, in spite of his good intentions. John Crispo is a "yet" man; he wants to lump us conveniently in with the Americans for purposes of his own, and consequently he hands us a good many more lumps than we deserve.

"It has already been empahsized in the Preface that this volume treats the United States and Canada almost as one in terms of both the diagnosis of and the prescriptions suggested for the problems posed. Some Canadians will take exception to this on the grounds that as sick as Canada may be it hardly compares with the U.S. on this plane. Materials gathered for this volume do not support such a strong distinction, although the sources drawn upon are predominantly from the U.S., rather than Canada."

"This volume" refers to Crispo's recently-published The Public Right to Know, Accountability in the Secretive Society, a 395-page, index and bibliography-free collection of clippings and book extracts stuck together with Crispo's own gluey prose. (Sample: "Perhaps the major purpose of this book is to suggest that confrontation over most of the basic issues troubling North American can be forestalled, if not obviated, by demonstrating to those so obviously shortchanged by the system that those traditionally best able to exploit them and the system as a whole are being called to account for their abuses.")

I hope that makes everything perfectly clear. (I should add at this point that the areas which Dr. Crispo finds most in need of reform include the professions and organized labor, business and corporations, the mass media, advertising and politics.) Too many vested interests have grown too unrestrained, in short. We need updated "checks and balances" in the public interest, full disclosure of sources of campaign funds, public members on private and institutional bodies, etc. There is still time to avert a revolution, but the hour is late.

In support of his thesis Crispo quotes nearly 300 recent sources, including criticisms of the Canadian Senate under the heading "Canada's Watergates", and an article condemning "15 minutes of violence" on St. Jean Baptiste Day in 1971 placed alongside a description of crime in Detroit, where a crime occurs "every 10 minutes day in and day out."

Although I do indeed "take exception" to Dr. Crispo's heavy hand with the tar brush, ~~there is~~ no doubt that his book contains some arresting passages worthy of notice. Some of these concern Pierre Trudeau, trade unions, whistleblowing, Mel Hurtig, lawyers in politics and advertising. The Public Right to Know has the air of a magazine article that exploded. If one picks one's way through the rubble carefully enough, however, it's quite possible to come up with something of genuine value.

THE PUBLIC RIGHT TO KNOW, by John Crispo. McGraw-Hill Ryerson. $12.95.

Notes from a Battered but Hopeful Survivor

By GEORGE OAKE

That a motorcycle is the catalyst in a mental journey roaring across a continent and 2,000 years of metaphysics may seem absurd. But when you finish this book many long standing subconscious questions stare you in the face like the shorthand of a highway sign.

Stratas of experience are piled atop one another in neat profusion. Author Robert Pirsig describes a summer motorcycle trip taken by himself, his son and a married couple from their Minnesota home to California. On the road he gives an interior monologue or "Chautauqua" — an old time series of popular talks intended to edify and entertain — on everything from motorcycle maintenance to a groping towards a new philosophical system reconciling science, religion and humanism.

ZEN AND THE ART OF MOTORCYCLE MAINTENANCE, by Robert M. Pirsig. Bantam. $2.25.

On another deeper level the narrator confronts his old self — an insane person dubbed Phaedrus who was ". . . destroyed by order of the court, enforced by the transmission of high voltage alternating current through the lobes of his brain."

As the journey proceeds Phaedrus begins to surface in the narrator's thoughts. He also worries about his son, who exhibits signs of encroaching mental illness.

Yet the book is more than a novel or a personal odyssey. It is an inquiry into values, as the subtitle claims, by a man who has survived the American way of life. He has run the gauntlet, coming through without rancor and with even hope.

One gets the impression that the narrator would be content to adapt to his new personality and go along with the world. But Phaedrus keeps gnawing at his reason, disturbing more conventional thoughts. In his insanity he implies he was on the edge of expanding reason.

"I will never know all that was in his head at that time, nor will anyone else. . ."

At the end of his journey in California he describes the beauty of the hills, vines, flowers and California's ocean smell.

". . . How can I love all this so much and be insane . . .? I don't believe it."

At every level Pirsig wrestles with duality. Even the physical journey is the historical American route from east to west while the narrator's thoughts roam through milleniums back to ancient Eastern thought.

He sees a huge split in the world caused by the failure of reason, as it is currently defined. Two warring mental camps, the classical and romantic modes, joust for hegemony, destroying each other and true rationality in the process.

The romantic mode is primarily inspirational, imaginative, creative or intuitive. Feelings rather than facts predominate. Classical understanding proceeds by reason and laws.

Classical understanding has predominated since Greek times, leading us into blind alleys as we grope for new meanings on the threshold of the post-industrial world. An emerging romantic counterculture intuits the blind alleys but offers only spite, not solutions.

"We have artists with no scientific knowledge and scientists with no artistic knowledge," writes Pirsig.

Since Renaissance times these dual modes worked separately, complementing each other. Now, in a world where the need for food, clothing and shelter no longer predominates, our whole rationality begins to be seen for what it is ". . . emotionally hollow, esthetically meaningless and spiritually empty."

Phaedrus was driven insane trying to resolve this duality. Now the author, recalling his other self, carries on the search roaring through primary America on a finely tuned machine.

"The first step down from Phaedrus' statement that Quality is the Buddha is a statement that such an assertion, if true, provides a rational basis for the unification of three areas of human experience which are now disunified. These three areas are religion, art and science. If it can be shown that quality is the central term of all three, and that this quality is not of many kinds, but of one kind only, then it follows that the three disunified areas have a basis for introconversion . . . Art is the godhead as revealed in the works of man."

None of this is entirely new, of course. Teilhard de Chardin wrote of God and man becoming one; R. D. Laing, the British psychiatrist, talks of how the mentally ill are the most sensitive people in a chaotic society. Even Jack Kerouac used the trip as a vehicle to explain his search for new rationality, a romantic understanding in Pirsig's terms.

PIRSIG . . . wrestling with duality

It is the manner in which Pirsig brings it all together, explaining philosophy in terms of the parts of a motorcycle. Long stretches of heavy chautauqua are relieved by simple descriptions of passing scenery. Gearing down through canyons he is gloomy; ascending into the sunlight he is hopeful.

Pirsig brings some odd qualifications to the literary world. A former university English teacher who did graduate work in India and then became a writer of technical manuals after a period in a mental institution, he possesses an unpretentious, almost flat style.

He is obviously brilliant and analytical to the point where his emotions are sometimes lost in reason. To the reader this comes through as selfishness, especially in dealing with his troubled son. At roadside campsites or during a mountain hike in Idaho the boy tries to communicate with his father only to be abruptly turned off. To write of this Pirsig must have been aware of it. The book must have been a terrible insight for its author.

On a more impersonal level he articulates what we see all around us: the inflexibility of a system grown brittle and dogmatic.

"To speak of certain government and establishment institutions as 'the system' is to speak correctly, since these organizations are founded upon the same structural conceptual relationships as a motorcycle. They are sustained by structural relationships even when they have lost all other meaning and purpose.

". . . The idea that the majority of students attend a university for an education independent of the degree and grades is a little hypocrisy everyone is happier not to expose. Occasionally a few students do arrive for an education but rote and the mechanical nature of the institution soon converts them to a less idealistic attitude."

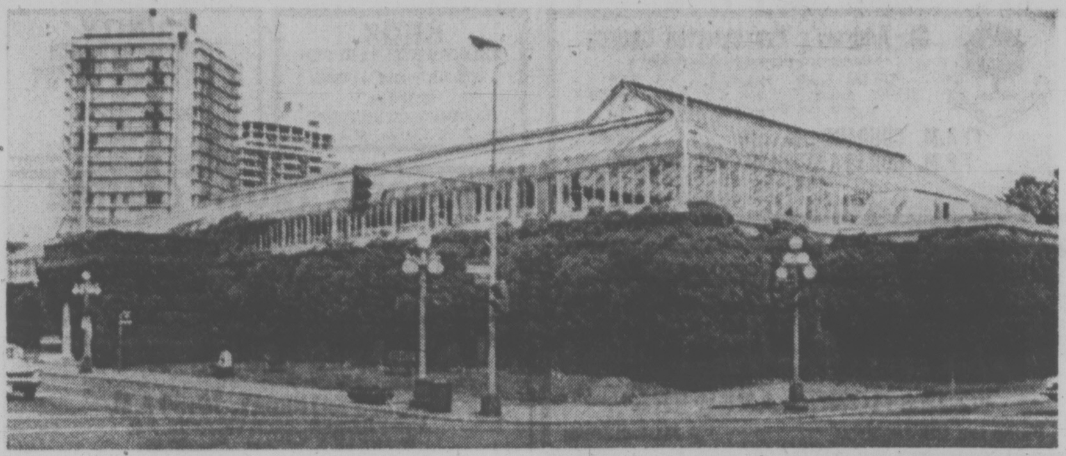
While these generalizations remain true today, Pirsig wrote this book in 1969 when the duality of classical and romantic understanding, as he defines it, was at its height. In the middle seventies the dogmatic reason of yesteryear — conventional solutions for radical problems as James Reston says — continues to batter its collective head against an impregnable wall. But the romantic counterculture, an intrinsic part of Pirsig's whole, has largely withered away, a victim of its own narcissism.

Is even our creative thought outdistanced by deepening social rigor mortis?

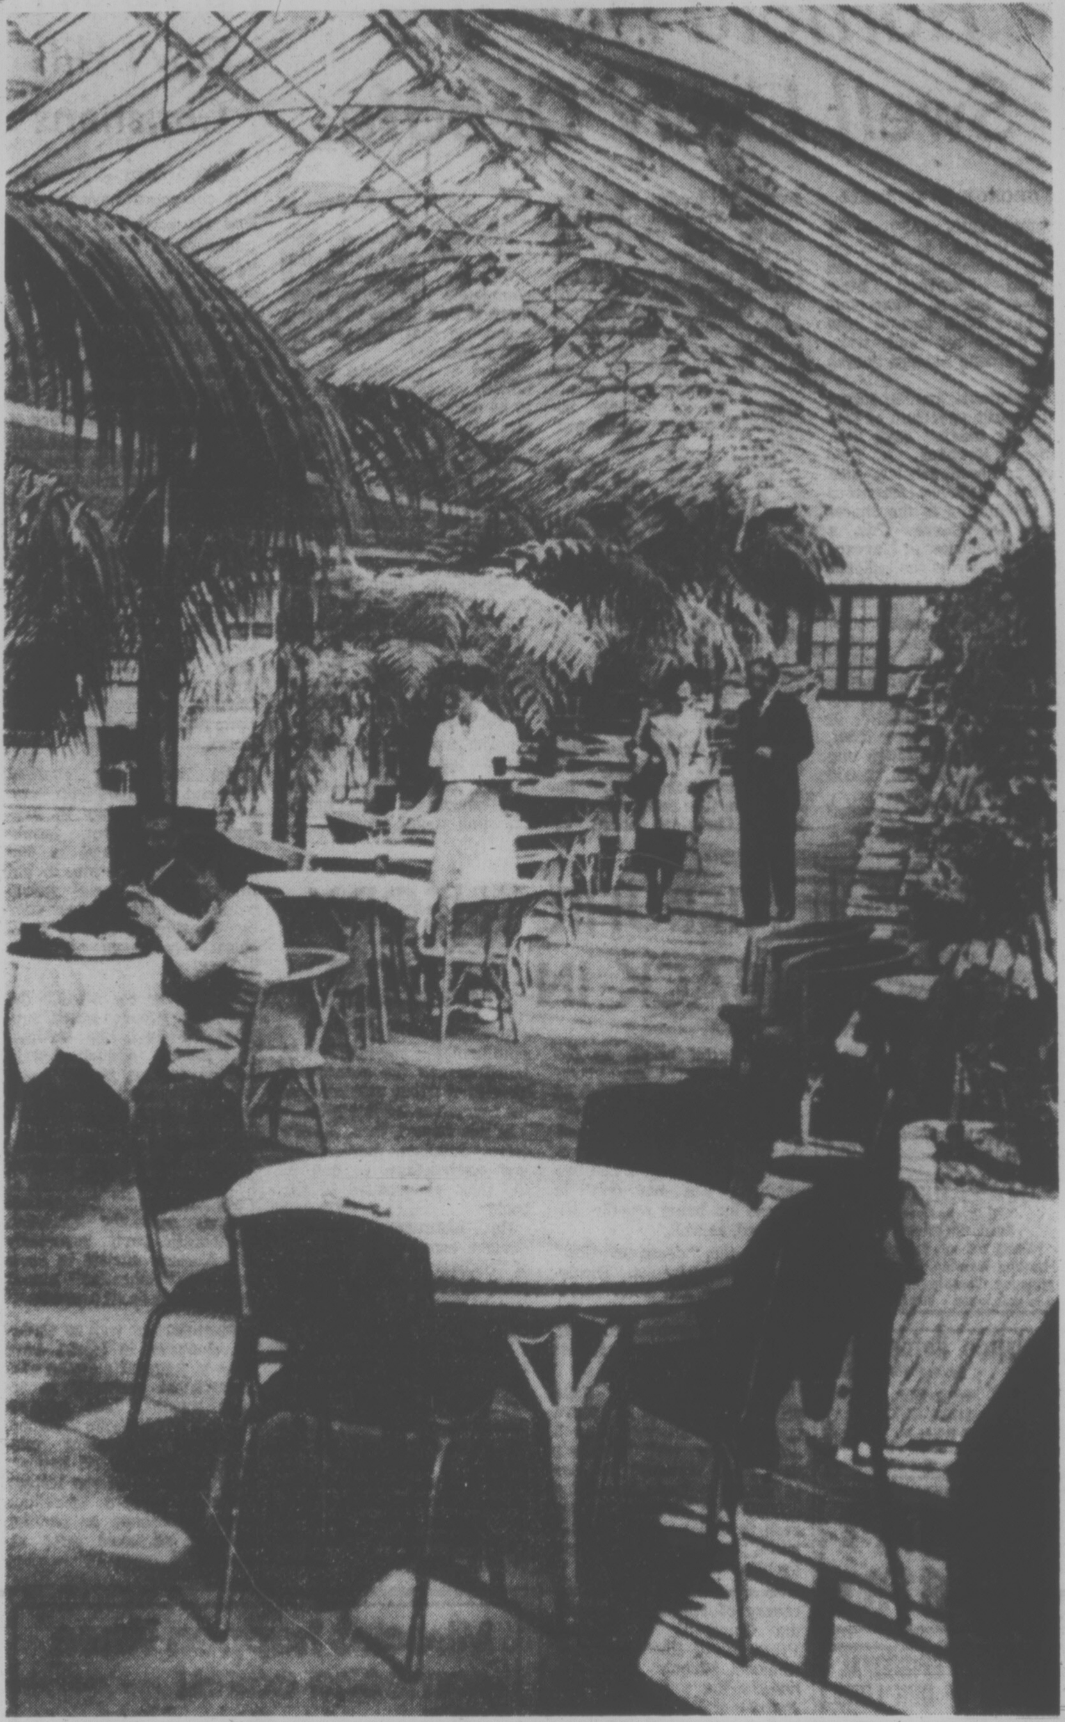
"The world has no existence outside the human imagination. It's all a ghost, and in antiquity was so recognized as a ghost, the whole blessed eventful world we live in. It's run by ghosts. We see what we see because these ghosts show it to us, ghosts of Moses, Christ and the Buddha, and Plato and Descarte."

At the end of the road on the California cliffs one is left with the impression that a man and a boy can solve their misunderstandings. But across North America the ghosts are still in command and even Robert Pirsig is not sure how to contain them.

A unique 'centre of delight' that has gone in 50 years from splendor to shabbiness and now, perhaps, a new role in city's life



From Full-Dress Swims to Love It All Happened at the Crystal



Palmy days around the pool for an intimate luncheon

Fifty years ago this week, the old town was jumping and Victorians were all agog to see the most magnificent tructural oddity since the Empress Hotel.

The occasion was the carnival week to mark the formal opening of the Crystal Garden, that unique "centre of delight" complete with salt water swimming pool, ballrooms, "the most beautiful indoor gardens imaginable" and picture galleries.

Although the building had been open to the public since June 8, 1925, the carnival celebrations were spread over the week June 26 to July 1.

Lieutenant Governor Walter C. Nichol kicked off the proceedings by crowning Faith Robson Queen of the Crystal Garden Festival, in front of a crowd of about 10,000 sepctators gathered outside the legislative buildings.

Then over to the new amusement centre where, presented with a golden key by D. C. Coleman, vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railways Western Lines, Nichol formally opened the Crystal Garden to the public.

Speechifying concluded, the CPR officials, the reeves and their spouses, and sundry other dignitaries capped off the big day with — what else? — an inaugural ball.

"Champers" flowed by the magnum, the flappers performed their knee-knocking dance routines with uninhibited zest . . . and the Crystal was duly christened.

It continued to sparkle with life for most of the half-century that followed.

Thousands swam — and some even reached Olympic standard — in the pool itself, which for the first 29 years of its life was filled with salt water pumped from Horseshoe Bay at the foot of Douglas Street.

Occasionally it was drained and filled with chairs, with a stage at the shallow end, for prize fights and concerts.

Banquets, balls, lectures, pet shows, flower shows . . . you name it and it was probably held in the adjoining ballrooms.

Romance bloomed under the palmettoes, riotous times were enjoyed and bizarre scenes recorded.

There was, for example, that strange full-dress swim in 1940, when for a $50 bet three members of a logging convention earned a round of applause by swimming the length of the pool . . . in their dinner jackets!

But then began the steady decline, from a once-elegant Victorian lady to a rather shabby, tarty old gal.

Finally, years of neglect took their toll. The city, which had inherited the building from the CPR in 1965 when the company relinquished its lease, recoiled in fright from a repair bill two years later.

Council learned then that a major overhaul would cost about $600,000 and decided the wise thing was to build a new pool — which eventually cost four times as much.

Abandoned in late 1971, the Crystal Garden now makes a mockery of its pretentious name with a depressing picture of dereliction and decay: broken floor boards, missing panes from the huge glass roof, the unmistakeable evidence of its latter-day doss house patrons.

But it is to be exhumed, the present city council has decreed. The hat will be passed around to wealthy foundations, $1.5 million collected and the Crystal Garden will begin new life — who knows, perhaps for another half-century at least — as a botanical garden and aviary.

And, It Came to Pass That After 15 Years . . .

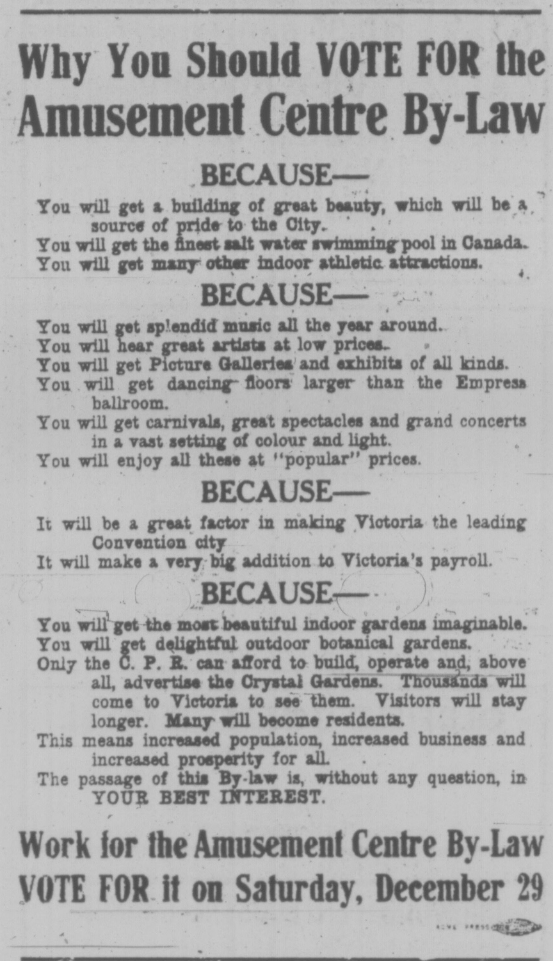
Perhaps the Crystal Garden could have been called The Last Dike, because it came about through the Canadian Pacific Railway's constant quest for the good deal, the fast buck, the juicy tax concession.

Terms for the construction of the Empress Hotel included tax concessions and free water for the first 15 years, says city archivist Ainslie Helmcken.

With the agreement's expiry date fast approaching, the CPR faced a whopping tax increase plus a big water bill, and this in a period of depression.

The city craftily suggested that it might be prepared to offer a better deal if the company would build an amusement centre, including a swimming pool.

The bylaw provided the company with 20 years' free water and exemption from taxes, plus a fixed tax and water rate for the Empress.



Why You Should VOTE FOR the Amusement Centre By-Law

BECAUSE—

You will get a building of great beauty, which will be a source of pride to the City.
You will get the finest salt water swimming pool in Canada.
You will get many other indoor athletic attractions.

BECAUSE—

You will get splendid music all the year around.
You will hear great artists at low prices.
You will get Picture Galleries and exhibits of all kinds.
You will get dancing floors larger than the Empress ballroom.
You will get carnivals, great spectacles and grand concerts in a vast setting of colour and light.

BECAUSE—

It will be a great factor in making Victoria the leading Convention city
It will make a very big addition to Victoria's payroll.

BECAUSE—

You will get the most beautiful indoor gardens imaginable.
You will get delightful outdoor botanical gardens.
Only the C. P. R. can afford to build, operate and, above all, advertise the Crystal Gardens. Thousands will come to Victoria to see them. Visitors will stay longer. Many will become residents.
This means increased population, increased business and increased prosperity for all.
The passage of this By-law is, without any question, in YOUR BEST INTEREST.

St. Paul Much Maligned

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

PERSPECTIVES AND PREJUDICES

Some quite bright people seem to think that they express great admiration for Jesus by damning St. Paul and dismissing him as a fanatic who fouled up the simple religion of Jesus. They sometimes quote Bernard Shaw's dictum, "There has really never been a more monstrous imposition perpetrated than the impossition of the limitations of Paul's soul on the soul of Jesus." And they would agree with H. G. Wells's comment on Paul's "triumph over the Nazarene he misrepresented and betrayed." These statements come from a couple of generations ago, but they reflect a critical orthodoxy of our time.

I must cofess that at one time I accepted that general position. But I came to recognize its unfairness when I gave some of Paul's writings a careful reading and learned a little about the development of Christian community in New Testament times.

I'll not try to whitewash Paul. A number of things about him upset me a little — and a few things more than a little. In some places his writings are confused and obscure — although the good modern translations are helpful here. Paul, as he himself tells us, was a rather mixed-up person — not a well-adjusted person, as we with our modern psychological wisdom judge such things.

Paul is charged with distorting Jesus' teaching and with misrepresenting Jesus' intentions. This seems to come, in part, from the assumption that because in the New Testament his letters come after the four Gospels they came after them in time. But it is one of the assured findings of modern biblical scholarship that Paul's letters had been written and were fore the Gospels appeared in written form. This is not to suugest that the Gospels were written to supplement Paul's writings. The Gospels and Paul's letters were written against the background of oral traditions about Jesus, and they all presuppose a basic Christian message. The Gospels were written as preaching and teaching aids as materials for use in worship, and as missionary propaganda pamphlets. Paul's letters, coming out of the same setting, were written in response to specific issues and problems in the early Church — and as Christian document they are as basic as the Gospels. The New Testament as a whole was a precipitate of the faith of the earliest Christians: it is a selection of documents which were circulated among them, a selection made to express and conserve what was most surely believed and accepted by them.

Paul's theology, his interpretation of the faith in Christ, was hammered out as he responded to the opportunities and challenges of his ministry. His teaching cannot be presented as a tidy, coherent system. And there were many fundamental things he did not say, for he could assume that they were firmly fixed in the general awareness of his readers.

Can a modern person take Paul seriously? If that modern person is a Christian person he or she must take Paul very seriously, for Paul's thought is built firmly into the Christain faith. And the non-Christian who has any curiosity about the phenomenon of the Christian religion in history must also take Paul seriously, for his letters, both in the New Testament Church and in the Church through the centuries, have been, and still are, fundamental Christian documents.

'Hartford Heresies' Swell Lively Debate

By GEORGE W. CORNELL

NEW YORK (AP) — A lively debate is swelling among theologians about the so-called "Hartford heresies"—a list of viewpoints that have been termed false and destructive and widespread among modern church people.

The attitudes are "apparent in the whole spectrum of religious life today," says Rev. Richard Newhaus, a New York Lutheran scholar, adding that they are erroneous and debilitating to the church.

Rev. Dr. Harvey Cox, a Baptist theologian of Harvard University, terms the indicted viewpoints "caricatures to the point of absurdity."

Rev. Avery Dulles, a Washington, D.C., Catholic scholar, contende the listed assumptions pervade contemporary culture and tend to erode belief. "Christian thought' in seeking to modernize itself, has in some cases fallen into captivity to modern world views."

Key theme of the assailed viewpoints, drawn up by a group of 18 leading Protestant and Catholic theologians at a meeting early this year at Hartford, Conn., is the asserted "loss of a sense of the transcendent" aspect of God.

In classic Judeo-Christian teaching, God is seen both as transcendentally greater and other than the created, finite cosmos, but also imminent or present in it, actively involved in human affairs and history.

Modern thought has tended to be one-dimensional about it, the Hartford statement says, limiting ideas of God to human efforts, in this world, reducing all reality to human thought, culture, struggles and capabilities.

Challenging the Hartford statement recently before officials of the interdenominational National Council of Churches, Cox said it involves a "peculiar form of God-world dualism," separating the Creator from his creation.

"It overlooks the incarnation," he said, referring to the Christian concept of God becoming human in Jesus Christ.

However, Neuhaus contended that the belief that "God has become man is completely vacuous unless there is God behind it, a transcendence that keeps us under judgment."

"God is committed to the human struggle, but he is not to be equated with the human struggle."

Among the asserted views which the Hartford statement cited as widely held nowadays but false were:

—Modern thoughts superior to all past forms of understanding.

—Religious language refers to human experience and nothing else. "We did not invent God, God invented us."

—All religions are equally valid; the choice is not a matter of truth but of preference or life style.

—The world must set the agenda for the church.

—An emphasis on God's transcendence may hinder Christian social concern.

NIEBUHR THEORY BACK IN FAVOR

During the height of the faddish 1960s, when young theologians were enamored with the counterculture, the influence and reputation of America's greatest native-born theologian of the last two centuries was not only in eclipse but being roundly discredited, as well.

With the "death of God" soon followed by the "Theology of Play" and other essentially Utopian theologies, the thought of Reinhold Niebuhr was brushed aside as irrelevant.

The 1970s, however, have refused to yield to the naive optimism swept both church and society and Niebuhr's "Christian realism" appears to many to have increasing relevance as religious leaders seek to find answers to such issues as the world hunger problem.

As a contribution to the recovery of Niebuhr's thought, the University of Chicago Press issued The Legacy of Reinhold Niebuhr, cloth edition of the university's The Journal of Religion issue on Niebuhr published last fall.

The book contains six articles examining various parts of Niebuhr's thought by such prominent theologians as Robert McAfee Brown, Martin E. Marty, Langdon Gilkey, Franklin I. Gamwell, Roger L. Shinn and Kenneth W. Thompson, along with an excellent introduction by Nathan A. Scott Jr.

At the heart of Niebuhr's theology, which Marty sees as a "Public" theology aimed at interpreting the American experience, was an attempt to recover or restating a biblical view of man.

In its starkest sense, it was the recovery of the notion of original sin, of an understanding of man, as Scott points, situated between freedom, or transcendence, and necessity, or finiteness.

Niebuhr poised his understanding of man in an ongoing polemic against what he called the "hard" and the "soft" Utopians. In the former category were such people as the Stalinists, who would justify any means necessary to achieve their goal or even those who would justify the slaughter of the Vietnam war for the Utopian ideology of freedom.

In the category of the "soft" Utopians were those sentimental pacifists who failed to see the menace in the rise of Hitler and much of the new left of the late 1960s.

In this regard, then, Shinn's essay, Realism, Radicalism, and Eschatology, is one of the most provocative in the book.

He examines Niebuhr's thought, especially his avowal of "realism" — That in group relations power and self-interest are key elements — over against Utopianism.

But despite the criticisms of some during the 1960s, Niebuhr's realism, his pragmatism, did not mean an endorsement of the staus quo or fellow-travelling with the so-called establishement. As Shinn points out, one of Niedorsement of the status quo or buhr's chief targets was "a Christian orthodoxy that was socially impotent."

S. Korean Gov't Hits Christians

TOKYO (WP) — A leading U.S. churchman says the current prosecution of Christian ministers in South Korea is "a political case" raising serious questions about basic freedoms in that country.

At the end of a four-day fact-finding mission in Seoul, Stated Clerk (general secretary) William P. Thompson of the United Presbyterian Church said there is clear evidence that the indicted clergymen are innocent of the charges against them.

Four ministers, including Kim Kwan Suk, general secretary of the Korean national council of churches, have been held in secret police interrogation centers or prison since April 3 on charges of embezzling funds given by a German organization for social action work in South Korea.

The indictment charged Kim and the others with "embezzling" the money by paying attorneys fees, family living expenses and in one case, maternity costs, to aid ministers and social action workers imprisoned last year in President Park Chung Hee's crackdown on dissidents.

"Bread for the world," the Germany agency which supplied the fund, has certified that its use in such church-related human rights cases was consistent with the purposes of the grant.

A German member of the current fact-finding mission, Dr. Richard von Weizacker of the German Evangelical Church and the Christian Democratic party, reportedly told Korean officials in Seoul that the "embezzled" money actually was spent properly.

Protestant as well as Catholic churches in Korea have been in frequent collision with government authority in recent months. Last year a Roman Catholic bishop, prominent Protestant ministers and nearly all national staff members of the Korean Christian student federation were imprisoned on sedition charges all were later released.

Churches Serve Dual Role

EDMONTON (CP) — Many churches in Canada have been in financial straits for years and many older, big-city churches have folded because they had no way to pay the bills. One development company things it has a solution.

A. V. Carlson Construction Ltd. and its management services arm are suggesting that churches make use of the resources they have, often in the form of land, to develop community-service centres which house both sanctuaries and community facilities and provide income.

Stan Clarke, client consulting manager, said in an interview churches have lost contact with communities in many cases and Carlson's proposal gives the church a chance to get back into communities by meeting both social and religious needs.

The proposal has been tried in both Edmonton and Yellowknife.

In Yellowknife the United Church wanted to provide services for everyone from toddlers to senior citizens. By using its existing structure and remaining land, it is in the process of building two 10-storey towers.

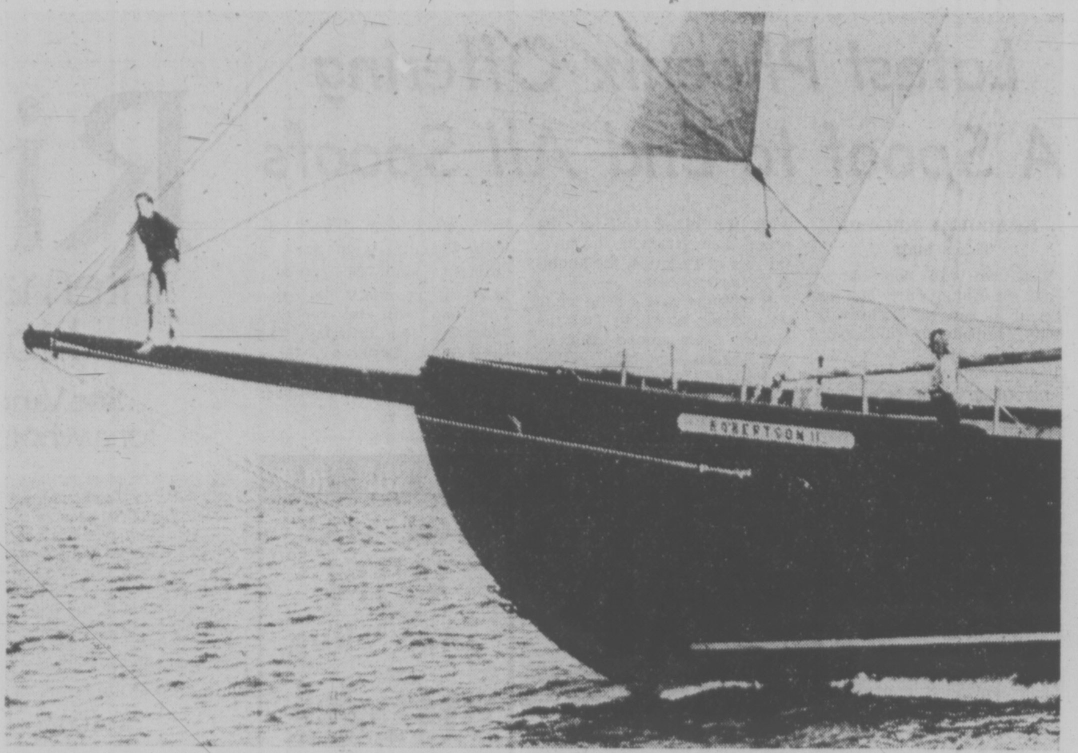
The towers include a large multi-purpose hall suitable for meetings and church services, smaller committee rooms and a chapel, five floors to rooms to be leased to the YWCA, two floors of apartments for rent to the general public, three floors of space available for rent to community-service groups with the rest used as apartments for senior citizens or the general public, Clarke said.

A massive project for a congregation of 150, but Mr. Clarke said it doesn't have to be a burden. The congregation set up a non-profit corporation which borrowed all of the $5.3 million needed for capital from Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. The loan will be repaid, less a 10-per-cent forgiveness, over 50 years with income from the building. Any surplus is used to improve the facility or further subsidize rents for the senior citizens.

A full-time manager and cleaning staff handle day-to-day administration and maintenance.

Carlson Construction takes about five per cent of the cost of the project, which it designs, plans and builds, as a fee.

The concept, Clarke said, is based on getting maximum value out of the land available. The company uses a curve to plot the size of the structure in relation to what surveys show its occupancy will be, so amenities such as lounges and game rooms can be included.



SAILING SCHOONER Robertson II of Victoria has found a temporary skipper for its summer West Trek adventure program. Vic Hookins will run the Quest Star Life Discovery Society's boat introducing young people to the claims of Jesus Christ on their lives. A permanent skipper is still needed, though, said city psychiatrist Dr. Philip Ney who heads the society aiming to help youth find purposes in life.

Jehovah's Witness Convention Set

Plans are shaping up for a Watchtower Bible and Tract Society for a district convention of Jehovah's Witnesses in Victoria this summer.

Clare Statton, convention manager from Victoria, said a four-day meeting is scheduled for the Memorial Arena, July 17 to 20.

Statton said 4,000 delegates are expected for the Victoria convention.

"This convention is one of over one hundred planned for the United States and Canada during June, July and August," he said. "This includes assemblies in the English, Spanish, French, Greek, Portuguese and Italian languages."

Commenting on the total attendance, Statton said over one million delegates are anticipated to attend conventions of Jehovah's Witnesses this year in the Northern Hemisphere.

The program at the Arena will run from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. and 3 to 5:30 p.m. each of the four days. It will include four spectacular Bible dramas in full costume, lectures and symposiums and discussions on subjects of vital interest to humankind today.

"Problems are certainly not new," Statton added, "but all are finding that these problems have intensified in recent months. Men in responsible positions actually fear global disaster including inflation, extreme food shortages, population explosion and increasing crime and terrorism.

"Oil shortages and economic collapse threaten many nations. In fact," he said, "so many groups met in 1974 that it has been called 'the year of international conferences.'

"Today what affects one segment of society affects all, many times with extreme suddenness. Therefore, the convention program will deal with all of these problems and, more importantly, show the ultimate solution to all human crises."

Statton said all sessions will be open to the public.

Pioneers' President

Bill Hitchin of 1060 Benvenuto Drive, Brentwood Bay, has been installed as the Victoria president of the Telephone Pioneers of America and will take over his duties July 1.

Telephone Pioneers is a social service organization within the phone industry.

Dave Innes, of 1249 Tattersall, has been installed as vice-president of the Victoria branch.

DRIVE-IN CHURCH HERALDS SUMMER

Volkswagen beetles on lime-green posters to be found around Victoria tell of a truly up-to-date summer Christian service swinging into its second year.

Victoria's Drive-in Church at the Hillside Shopping Centre will be celebrated every Sunday evening from 8:30 to 9:15 during July and August.

Sponsored by Emmanuel Baptist, the service takes place in the main mall entrance of the parking lot.

Inaugurated last year, the service was highly successful and attracted an average of 450 people each week.

"The reasons for its success are that the service is short, lively and interesting, people don't have to enter a stuffy, hot building and they can come as casually as they wish," said Emmanuel Youth Minister Norman Barton.

"There is no offering and no coercion to find church prospects at the service," he said.

Variety of Events Highlight Sunday

Events of spiritual merit for Sunday include:

—Salvation Army Band and choir members performing outdoors in the Cameron Band Shell of Beacon Hill Park at 7 p.m. Third in a series of 12 interdenominational Christian services in the park this summer, it will be conducted by Major Ivan McNeilly of the Victoria Citadel Corps.

—Combined services of Cordova Bay United and St. David by-the-Sea Anglican start this week for the summer as Archdeacon E. H. Maddocks preaches at 9:45 a.m. in Cordova Bay church. This year marks the seventh the two churches have come together regularly for worship.

—Missionary Rev. Paul Kaufman will speak at Trinity Christian Centre services 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. Leader of the Hong Kong-based missionary organization Asian Outreach, Kauffman says Christianity flourishes in China despite religious repression of the 1960s there.

Only Transport New For Travelling Minister

EDMONTON (CP) — In 1925, travelling Rev. A. B. Simpson halted his horses at a little church, sounded the bell and waited for the Indians to "appear out of the bush."

Today, 50 years after the formation of the United Church of Canada, he still is crossing miles to minister to souls—but now he stops his 1970 Ford at a country church and waits for the congregation to appear in cars.

Mr. Simpson, one of the men who has conducted services in the United Church since it began, celebrated the 50th anniversary of the union of Methodists, Congregationalists and most Presbyterians into one united church in Canada.

"When I got to church, I would ring the bell because the Indians had no watches to keep time, and they would come from every direction out of the bush."

That church was on a Manitoba Indian reserve, one of the many parishes between the Yukon and Nova Scotia Mr. Simpson has served.

"Weekdays, I'd visit their wigwams or shacks. I love people—all people. I love to sit and talk to families in the evenings, and I spent practically every night doing that kind of thing."

The son of a Maritimes merchant, Mr. Simpson, now living in Edmonton, grew up on a cargo vessel bringing molasses and spices from the West Indies. He's never left the sea in spirit, and now sees himself as captain of a ship of souls.

The role of the clergyman has changed over the last 50 years, he observed.

"The clergyman used to be set apart as a spiritual leader, God's representative whose specialty was the steering of souls. As with the sea captain, you put your life in his hands when you were over the deep oceans."

Nowadays, the clergyman has become more of a counsellor than God's representative in many cases. Sunday he's Reverend; Monday he's "Butch."

Mr. Simpson said he will continue as a seven-day-a-week clergyman for the rest of his life, even though he was supposed to retire in 1968. He still leads services almost every Sunday in small Alberta communities.

Still partly Presbyterian at heart, Mr. Simpson said "I felt union was engineered to a great degree by people in the establishment in Toronto who got the idea because the church would be bigger, it would be better. I wasn't much in favor of union then and I'm not yet."

But Florence Scoffield, also a member of the United Church since its beginning, says there were many advantages to the union.

Settling back on the couch in her Edmonton home, she said "one of the big motivating conditions was that missionaries from the churches found it difficult to get across to people that there were all these different churches and it was the same Christian religion.

"But the main urge towards union was biblical, the saying of Jesus "that all may be one."

There were also financial considerations and a shortage of ministers.

In fact, there were so few ministers that when Mrs. Scoffield took her first teaching job in 1923 in a one-room log schoolhouse, it also involved conducting Sunday services at the school.

There was yet another reason for the formation of the United Church, she added.

"Many of the churches in the west had already been united but there still was great fragmentation with a Church of God down the road from the Church of the True God, a few miles away from the Church of the Only True God."

However, sometimes unification had a fragmenting effect, she said.

"There were quite a few hard feelings and some families broke instead of unifying over the issue."

But the 50-year-old union is widely accepted now, and further unions will come, said Mrs. Scoffield.

PREACHER PAYS DEBT

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (UPI) — Fourteen years ago, W. C. Hunter, "obsessed with gambling and wild ways," stole $3,000 from the grocery store where he worked.

Now a minister in the World's Church of The Living God, Hunter, 39, returned this week to the store "to make restitution."

A Christian for the last 10 years, he said he decided to practice what he preaches. Although he confessed to his congregation the details of his former life and the theft, "it didn't seem like it was enough."

So he and his wife met with Don Blevins, the head of the food store, and discussed terms of restitution.

"I have been forgiven by God," Hunter said. "Now I want forgiveness from the people I stole from."

The visit to the store was preceded by a confession to the Chattanooga police department.

"I didn't know whether they were going to put me in jail," he said. "I just felt I couldn't face my congregation knowing about the crime. After all, I could still preach in prison, too."

A call to the state attorney general's office disclosed that the statute of limitations had run out and Hunter remained free.

"That was just one more thing I had to thank God for," he said.

He explained that at 25 he was "obsessed with gambling and wild ways," and had run ups everal gambling debts. One afternoon, the safe at the grocery store where he was a clerk broke down, and the owner was forced to hide about $3,000 in a produce bin.

"I knew they would have the safe fixed by the next day so I hid downstairs until everyone had gone, then got the money and left without anyone seeing me," Hunter confessed.

"Man, I felt good with that big sack of money. I bought a half a pint of gin, went to the pool hall to celebrate and afterwards I went home and my wife and I rolled up the money bill by bill and stuck them in Christmas balls."

RHODESIA RECRUITS WOMEN

SALISBURY (AP) — White-ruled Rhodesia, apparently hardpressed by black nationalist guerrilla incursions, has announced it will begin recruiting women Sunday into the army and air force.

Defence Minister P. K. Van der Byl also announced a 40-per-cent pay increase for frontline troops of all races.

Van der Byl said in a statement that if a policical settlement is not reached, there will be a "total national concentration" on eradicating "terrorists and their political adherents."

"All of our resources—industrial, financial and military—will be totally galvanized into effecting this end and in such circumstances things will go very hard indeed for the terrorists," he said during a ceremony opening a new army barracks at Wankie.

Wonen will be recruited to release men in uniform from duties at military bases so they an serve in the field, an army spokesman in Salisbury said.

The announcement said women between the ages of 18 and 50 would be recruited into both services although "suitable applicants over the age of 50 would be considered," the spokesman said.

The women will take part in a two-week training program on the use of weapons, drill, military organization and etiquette. They will undergo a month's probationary service before being required to sign up for at least one year.

The army plans to use the women volunteers as radio operators and intelligence clerks. Air force duties will include clerical and intelligence work, air traffic control and work on safety equipment.

Witness Admits Bringing Amphetamines to Sell Here

A 34-year-old Montreal man told county court Friday he brought five pounds of amphetamines to Victoria last year to deliver to Dennis Grant Laverty, standing trial on a charge of possession of methamphetamine (speed) for the purpose of trafficking.

Robert Drainville, himself facing two charges arising from the same incident in Victoria last June 6, said he was to be paid "five times $3,800" but only received $7,000 from Laverty earlier in Montreal.

He told Judge Montague Drake he came by plane to Victoria June 5 and on the Vancouver-Victoria section met a man named Okell. He understood from Okell he was to meet Laverty and he did meet Laverty the same night in the lobby of the Century Inn.

The three of them went to another hotel and "kept on discussion of our business" and he returned to the Century alone.

Next morning, he said, he bought a scale from a department store and weighed the amphetmamines, putting two pounds in a separate bag and hiding some in the ceiling.

He and Laverty went to the liquor store because, Drainville said, he wanted some paper bags. After that, they went to his room and he put two pounds of amphetamines in a liquor bag.

He said he first became aware, by talking to Laverty, that he wasn't getting his full money when he got to Victoria.

Drainville admitted to a criminal record involving convictions for armed robbery in 1959, car theft in 1970 and theft under $200 in 1971.

Cross-examined by defence counsel Sidney Simmons of Vancouver, Drainville said he is a furniture salesman. He agreed he also sells drugs but only amphetamines.

He couldn't recall who introduced Laverty to him but said Laverty paid him $9,000 directly although $2,000 was recalled.

He agreed there was an elderly male person present. Pressed repeatedly by Simons for the older man's identity, Drainville said it was Walter.

Asked if it was Walter Gay, he said it "could be."

Drainville agreed he was committted for trial June 4 in Victoria on two charges arising from the speed seizure, that the charges were red to him and that he pleaded not guilty before Judge Drake. The case was adjourned to fix a date for trial.

He said his case had been waived to Montreal and that he pleaded guilty there before June 4.

Asked how it was then that he appeared June 4 before Judge Drake and pleaded not guilty, he said this was arranged between his lawyer in Montreal and Harold Turnham, his Victoria lawyer.

He denied that any "deal" was involved and said his Montreal lawyer told him he would come to Victoria "to protect my bail." He also denied there was any "deal" when he was arrested June 6, 1974.

Under the protection of the Canada Evidence Act, he admitted dealing in stolen cars for five years and in drugs for about two years.

He said he hasn't been promised leniency in his sentence and that no date had been set in Montreal for sentence.

Asked where he got the drugs, he said "I bought it from somebody."

Do you wish to tell us from whom, asked Simons.

"No."

Drainville said he paid $7,000 and had the rest "fronted."

By whom?

"By the person who gave me the drug."

"Yes."

Last witness Friday was chemical analyst John Ladds who said samples he tested showed 74.8 to 74.9 per cent methamphetamine hydrochloride.

At the beginning of Friday's session, Simons asked Judge Drake to disqualify himself and declare a mistrial because Drainville had entered a plea before him and there was, is effect, a mixing of trials.

Prosecutor Mike Hutchison disagreed saying there was no evidence before Judge Drake on the merits of the Drainville case.

Judge Drake ruled that the Laverty trial can proceed. "I can't see any prejudice, real or apparent," he said.

Latest Phoenix Offering A Spoof to End All Spoofs

By AUDREY JOHNSON
Times Staff

Well, we still don't know What the Butler Saw, but the rest of us saw an explosively funny, impudently tongue-in-cheek farce at UVic's Phoenix Theatre Friday.

Joe Orton's title is as wild and improbable as the play itself, but What the Butler Saw gets the Phoenix Summer Theatre repertory program off to a rattling start.

What's it about? In a word, sex. But it's sex that is all very hypothetical. The scene is the consulting room of a private psychiatric hospital.

People talk about sex. They undress, swap clothes, are caught in compromising situations. There is double talk, double entendre and double shuffle of bodies in curtained alcove and under desk.

And then Orton, not content with having provided a perfect immitation in contemporary terms, of classical farce, devotes the final 10 minutes to a gorgeous lampoon of the resolution of a 19th century melodrama. You have to see it to believe it.

It's the spoof to end all spoofs. It's raw and wry; it sneers and jeers with references such as the one about a therapist who is "making white golliwogs for sale in color-prejudiced communities."

Phoenix co-artistic director, Harvey M. Miller, has successfully staged this one, with the other half of the team, John Krich in the pivotal role of Prentice, the slightly lecherous doctor.

It took the cast a little while on opening night, to find the proper farce tempo. But by the second act the rather heavy and measured tread had resolved itself into a lighter, swifter texture and the tendency toward overstress was less noticeable.

Jo Luke Krempasky, Michael Hodgson, Anton Stratford, Sheila Keating, Darcey Callison are the other members of the talented and generally appealing cast. Hodgson's police sergeant is a particularly well-balanced and effective characterization.

Set, lighting and costume design by Bindon Kinghorn, Judy Pool and Jo Luke Krempasky respectively, compliment each other and provide a visually satisfying effect.

What the Butler Saw will be repeated tonight at 8 and next week on Friday. Woody Allen's Play It Again Sam, a different kind of comedy, joins the repertory Wednesday and will be repeated Thursday and Saturday. The third play, Broadway, takes its place the following week and the repertory continues through Aug. 2.

Some Nifty Needling

By DON VIPOND
Times Staff

So you think your mummy is handy with a needle and thread?

At Victoria hospitals plastic surgeons are preparing to undertake some stitching which would make anybody's mother turn in her thimble.

It's called micro-vascular surgery and it's a sort of invisible mending.

It involves work so fine it's about as hard to describe as it is to see.

But take this skinny piece of string and assume it's a vein. If it was broken in two, how would you go about sewing the butt ends together — with up to eight sutures — so it was a hollow tube again? That's what micro-vascular surgery is all about.

It's not work for anyone in a hurry. One of the plastic surgeons, Dr. Tom McQueen, says operations can take up to 10 hours and can be "fairly tedious."

One misplaced stitch or suture and the job is ruined. There is simply no room for error.

So surgeons do the job through a microscope which magnifies the operating field up to 25 times. They use instruments which look like cutlery from a doll's house.

Micro-vascular surgery comes into play when someone loses a finger, for example, and doctors want to sew it back on, or when someone loses a patch of their hide in an accident such as a motorcycle spill and a patch from elsewhere on their body must be used to close the wound.

In either case the blood supply which nourishes the tissue has to be re-established and that means re-connecting the tiny veins and arteries which carry it.

Chinese and Japanese surgeons are pioneers in the field. Micro-vascular surgery has arrived in Victoria because the ladies auxiliary at Victoria General Hospital came up with the money, about $800, to buy the initial set of about a dozen instruments.

MICROSCOPE which magnifies work up to 25 times as well as steady pair of hands are needed for operations which can take up to 10 hours.

Doctor Wins $9,000 Award For Dismissal

A former Victoria doctor who claimed he was wrongfully dismissed from his job at Gorge Road Hospital has been awarded $9,000 in damages and costs.

The parties, David Charles Arnott and the hospital, reached the settlement midway through a B.C. Supreme Court trial Thursday.

The trial, in front of Mr. Justice Victor Dryer, was to have run for three days, but the parties came up with an agreement Thursday. Arnott's lawyer Don Farquhar said Friday.

Farquhar said the hospital, represented by lawyer Ken Murphy, agreed to pay Arnott $7,500 in general damages, $500 special damages and $1,000 for costs.

Arnott, 60, a medical doctor who was hired in September, 1969, as medical co-ordinator of the hospital, claimed in the court case that the hospital had breached its contract with him in June, 1973.

Arnott charged the hospital had changed the terms of his employment creating conditions which were "unreasonable and impossible" for him to accept.

Farquhar argued that by thus changing the conditions of his employment, the hospital had "thereby effectively and improperly dismissed (him) from his employment."

MUSEUM MISSING 9 RARE BOOKS

Nine rare books worth about $4,000 are missing from the Maritime Museum.

Missing is a three-volume collection entitled Voyage to the Pacific Ocean, 1776-1780, published in London in 1785, with two volumes edited by Captain James Cook and the third by James King.

Also gone is a six-volume collection, Voyage of Discovery to the North Pacific Ocean, edited by John Vancouver and published in London in 1801.

The Cook set, a second edition, is valued at $3,500, said museum director Col. J. W. D. Symons today.

The Vancouver set, also a second edition, is valued at about $500.

Symons said police were notified Thursdy, and they will alert booksellers to watch for anyone trying to sell the books.

"I think a fellow who's taken books like this, a complete set, they're probably going into his own library," he added.

The books were kept in the museum library which is normally reserved for museum staff and members and off bounds to visitors, said Symons.

However the room has been used for meetings and lectures, he said, so many have had access to it.

The books are believed to have disappeared anytime in the past three years.

Symons said staff noticed one book missing, so a check of other rare books was made and disappearance of the others was discovered.

The Arts of the Raven Gallery at 45 Bastion Square lost more than $3,000 worth of sterling silver jewelry in a break-in overnight Wednesday, Victoria police reported.

Club Seeks Sci-Fi Fans

Science fiction buffs speak a language all their own — so one of their problems is finding others in the community keen to chat in the same jargon.

That's why Stan Hyde of 3014 Pickford Rd. and Kirk Bullough of 3012 Volmer Rd. in Victoria, together with a couple of others, have in mind launching a local SF club if enough space age fans are around to support it.

What do sci-fi types talk about?

The literature, the movies, the art, any facet of the subject, Hyde said Friday.

He and Bullough are both university students but he says the subject attracts people of all ages and both sexes. They number in the thousands and are organized around the world, with a wealth of magazines and newsletters catering to their special interests.

And space dreamers have been around for awhile, long before moon landings and blockbuster films like 2001: A Space Odyssey, snapped the general public's attention to worlds beyond.

Hyde attended the 31st World Science Fiction Convention ("Worldcon" in the jargon) in Toronto two years ago which attracted 3,000. Last year's Worldcon in Washington, D.C., pulled about 6,000. This year the world conference is in Australia.

In Vancouver, there is the B.C. Science Fiction Association, where the last annual meeting in February drew an audience of about 500.

Anyone interested in taking part in a local club can write Hyde or Bullough or phone Hyde at 478-3195.

20% Hike For Homes —Realtor

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

Value of homes in the Victoria area will rise 20 per cent this year, mainly due to increased land values, according to spokesmen of the real estate industry.

A survey by the Times produced the following consensus on the housing market:

—House prices, on average, have already risen 10 per cent during the first six months of this year and are expected to rise another 10 per cent by year's end.

—The price of land is the main factor in the increase. For example, view lots in Gordon Head that sold for $24,000 in January now are valued at $32,000, an increase of 33 per cent.

—Any used house on the market under $50,000 is sold very quickly and price increases have been rapid. Any house listed in the low $40,000s that is livable will sell the same day it is listed.

—New houses under $55,000 are a real bargain on today's market and are the result of a large surplus of this type of housing that was completed during the winter when the demand was almost nil due to the lack of mortgage funds. While these houses are well-priced, their number is dwindling fast because of renewed interest in new homes.

—Newly-constructed homes over $55,000 are also selling well and can be expected to go up 10 per cent in price between now and year's end, mainly due to land values.

—There has been little increase in the value of homes above $125,000 and the market for this type of housing has been slow.

While housing prices and land values have risen strongly in the first six months, some of the increase was a restoration of values lost during the winter slump.

For example, good view lots in Gordon Head had been selling for as much as $29,000 last June before the price fell to $24,000 in January. The price for land and housing has increased steadily since winter.

D. F. Hanley of D. F. Hanley Agencies Ltd. said the outlook for the last half of 1975 is for a very orderly market with gradual price increases.

He said the price escalation and demand for houses in the first half of 1974 was excessive, followed by a severe slump in demand and prices.

This was a result of a drying up of mortgage funds. The supply of mortgage money is improved this year and the flow of funds could be even higher next year.

"A 20 per cent increase in the value of homes this year may seem high, but it may be nothing compared to the escalations we could have in 1976 if, as we expect American investment flows into this country in the form of mortgage funds. Prices would really take off."

A spokesman for Block Bros. confirmed that real estate prices are expected to rise about 20 per cent in 1975.

He said the supply of mortgage funds continues to be fairly good with the prevailing interest rate ranging from 11 per cent to 11.25 per cent.

Spokesmen for the Greater Victoria Real Estate Board also confirmed that price escalation of 20 per cent, on average, could be expected this year. The rate of increase would depend upon the type of house and its location.

House prices would increase faster than the Canadian average at the present rate of climb.

While a 20 per cent increase is expected here, the average Canadian house is expected to go up only 15 per cent this year, according to a study by Arthur Mingay, national president of Canada Trust Co.

Because of the high prevailing interest rates across the board, mortgage interest rates may have to rise above the present level of 11 to 11.25 per cent to attract investment funds to the mortgage market, Mingay said.

Four Firemen Injured Fighting House Fire

Four city firemen were hurt fighting a house fire Friday and a fifth man was injured later when struck by a falling chandelier.

A fire department spokesman said two of the firemen suffered cut hands and two others received back injuries.

The fire, in a house occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Prescott at 2512 Wark, caused an estimated $5,000 damage.

A relative of the tenants, Cyril Prescott, 35, of 128 Randal, was injured when he entered the house after the fire and the chandelier fell while he was standing in the living room.

He was treated by Royal Jubilee Hospital for a neck injury and later released.

The spokesman said the fire broke out in a bedroom clothes cupboard and spread through the bedroom and livingroom.

He said one possible cause of fire was children playing with matches.

Instrument-Maker of New Breed

max low

There is a young lady of the lake I know, who sits and dreams her life away.

She paints, when the mood takes her. But moods are not demanding.

And often I have envied her.

Driftwood guitar

But not any more; not since I met Je Titus. For Je sits on enchanted Hornby Island, not dreaming nor drifting but creating things of great beauty and selling what he creates in order to exist as one of what he describes as "a new breed of self-sufficient young people."

I first found Je Titus, musical instrument-maker supreme, at the Arts Caravan, a sort of small rock festival going on last weekend at a Hornby Island campground, where he was filling in on electric bass for the short-handed touring Whitewater band.

But later we met again where he and Martha Ellis and their Tonkanese kitten named Riva live in a little house overlooking Sandpiper Beach. And, while a record of Laurindo Almeido and the Modern Jazz Quartet played softly in the background, Je talked of architecture and of how the design of buildings led to the creation and building of musical instruments.

Je (you pronounce it Jay) was born in Champagne, Illinois, but he is quick to tell you that he's been in Canada as a landed immigrant for six years.

Martha comes from a little village near Hamilton in Ontario and she teaches music at Hornby Island School as well as giving private piano lessons and joining Je in the evenings as one-third of the six-member band in the Thatch, the island's neighborhood pub.

Je studied architecture, art and anthropology at Arizona State College but music was in his blood and he began making 12-string guitars while he was at school. His father is professor of music at Concordia College in St. Paul, Minn., and his mother teaches music and Je describes the first instrument he learned to play as "enforced piano."

Now, after 11 years as a professional instrument-maker, Je Titus has made such a name for himself, such a reputation for exquisite craftsmanship that he doesn't need to advertise. His customers are all friends or relations of former customers. And the word keeps spreading. He receives so many inquiries that he is at least a year behind with his orders. And to help him out, he is training Swiss-born apprentice Gilbert Gussett.

His work is highly-regarded in Vancouver, where most of his customers live, and he makes instruments for the Early Music Society there.

"I made a rebec, which they have been using in their concerts for the last few years, and I'm working on a Gothic harp for them right now," says Je.

Titus, who says he learned a lot from Victoria resident Henk Newnhouse — "an old man who has been very fair with his ideas" — doesn't just make instruments from standard designs but creates his own original works of art for the music world.

"I design most of the shapes myself and have over 30 different designs for electric instruments, six of which I consider classic forms," says Je, who makes all kinds of guitars, banjos, lutes, dulcimers and harps.

Today, Je works mostly on the small Irish harps because "there are so few people making them now." It takes about a month working every day to make a harp and Je sells them for $300 up, depending on the type of wood and the number of abalone shell or silver inlay carvings done. Dulcimers can cost from $130 to $300, again depending on the kind of wood and the inlays.

Much of the materials used comes from driftwood found on the beach not more than 100 feet from Je's front door. Some of the wood used comes from a hardward wholesalers in Vancouver and Je has to go over and "listen" to every piece.

But driftwood and roofing shake blocks can make parts of the instruments.

"'The occasional shake block has the right ring to it to make an instrument top," says Je. "The sounding board on top is always red cedar or spruce, whether it's a guitar harp or dulcimer," he explains. "And the rest can be walnut, mahogany, rosewood or maple.

"See this guitar, I made it in two days out of a mahogany plank that drifted up from the ocean. I thought it was very appropriate to Hornby Island."

But that guitar and a traditional Irish harp, which has a design dating back more than 1,000 years, are the only two instruments Je owns. He didn't have one of his own for a stretch of six years.

"It may seem silly for an instrument-maker not to own an instrument," Je laughs, "but that's the funny thing, when you finish one there's always a customer waiting and the landlord is waiting and the grocer is waiting . . . ."

After some years on Pender Island and then Galiano Island, living in a commune of musical-instrument and geodesic dome ("you might call them spaces to live in") builders, Je moved to Hornby "because of the vibrations," two and-a-half years ago.

"This is a very unique island in terms of the proportion of young people who have got past the exploring stage and are relatively successful craftsmen," explains Je. "This is a craftsmen's island."

"I feel good with the people here — it's the first place I've ever lived where I've felt I could relate to the community as a whole. A lot of the people here are my fellows — they are successful young craftspeople — and a lot of the people who aren't that are sympathetic to that lifestyle."

It's a delightful place and the people I met were warm and friendly. But it's not an island of young drifters and dreamers. They work hard.

"Instead of just drifting, I'm creating something worthwhile and not being a burden on society," says Je. "I am doing my creation day by day; I can fix my own car, repair my own stereo if it breaks down and am putting in a garden. I'm self-sufficient."

"I believe the world is changing rapidly and there is a breed of self-sufficient young people emerging."

Now there, on Hornby Island, is a spirit I can envy.

New Process For Tar Sands

HAUPPAUGE, N.Y. (CP) — Guardian Chemical Corp., using a new chemical process, has announced its first production of crude oil extracted from Canada's Athabasca oil sands in Alberta.

Production was achieved in a small plant built in this Long Island community by Guardian to process Athabasca oil-bearing sand shipped from Alberta by New Western Oil Sands Ltd., a consortium of Canadian financial and oil interests which is providing financial backing.

The announcement did not say how much oil had been produced, the level of production expected to be reached or the cost per barrel for the initial production. But it did say the plant has started running "on a regular basis" and is intended to demonstrate the "efficiency and economic feasibility" of the Guardian process.

Dr. Alfred R. Globus, Guardian president, estimated that, based on performance of current operations, a full scale facility could produce 150,000 barrels of oil a day at a cost of approximately $3 to $4 a barrel. The current well head price of a barrel of oil in Alberta is $6.50, due to go up to $8 on July 1.

The Guardian process, demonstrated at a press conference in nearby New York City last fall, uses a special chemical, identified as Polycomplex, originally developed for dispersing oil spills.

The process involves mixing the black oil sands with water and Polycomplex and rotating the mixture in a moderately heated environment for about 30 minutes. The oil is drawn from the sand during rotation and rises to the surface of the mixture and is poured off. The water then is drawn off, leaving the sand.

The oil recovered by the process goes to the refinery for conversion. The water is stored for use with the next batch of oil sand and the sand is washed and used for fill in the areas from which it was originally removed.

The announcement said the first production would go next week to refineries in the U.S. and abroad. The refiners were expected to evaluate it for refining into light oils and other petroleum-based products.

Dr. Globus said the cost of building a full-scale production facility would be about one-third of that of existing processes used to recover oil from the oil sands. His process, he added, would halve the amount of energy required in present extraction procedures.

Unlike processes in current use in Alberta's Athabasca region, there was no need for large volumes of water in the Guardian process. Nor was sodium hydroxide caustic soda used in the process.

INSURANCE TODAY
The objective of "Insurance Today" is to pass across to you Facts, Information and Ideas on how to insure your Property, Business and Life, in simple straightforward, understandable language. This week, John Oster presents an article on Business Interruption Insurance.
A Fire Insurance Policy insures against all DIRECT loss by fire and extended coverages. Direct loss is understood to mean not only the damage actually inflicted by the fire or extended coverage perils, but also any other damage of which fire is the proximate cause. Thus, an insured is protected for loss caused by water used to extinguish a blaze, or by smoke from the fire, or any directly connected result of fire like the collapse of a structure, or destruction of property caused by efforts to fight the fire, etc. The insuring clause of the REGULAR Fire Insurance policy states that it will indemnify the insured for direct loss by fire, but "WITHOUT compensation for loss resulting from INTERRUPTION of business or manufacture." If a business enterprise is compelled after a fire to suspend or curtail its activities, it may stand to lose a great deal more than the value of the property which was destroyed or damaged. During the period of suspension, the firm will lose not only the profits it would otherwise have earned, but will also have to meet certain continuing expenses like taxes, interest on mortgages, and other indebtedness, salaries of executives and employees under contract, maintenance expenses, rent (in some instances), advertising, minimum or fixed charges for services and utilities, etc. If a building is damaged or destroyed by fire, the owner may be entitled to full reimbursement under his Fire Insurance for the actual damages sustained by the structure but he will almost always lose the rental income he was receiving until the premises are restored to tenantable condition. There are several forms of Business Interruption Insurance available to a policy holder. We would be pleased to recommend the proper coverage to suit the needs of your business or investment property. Please feel free to give me a call with no obligation. At Bayshore, we are dedicated to the Total Insurance Concept; specialists in every field of insurance joining forces to give you the very best in Insurance Service.

Failure Rate High Eor MIS Projects

MANAGEMENT MEMO

By DARWIN J. FEDORICK
P. S. Ross and Partners

Far more than a grain of truth is contained in the adage "It would take 500 accountants over 50 years to make the error our computer just did in five minutes." As insurance agaisnt such wasteful occurrences large organizations invest millions of dollars annually in maintaining staffs of management information systems (MIS) experts. More is now being spent in developing computerized formal information systems than is spent on computing machinery itself.

Despite these enormous investments, the failure rate for MIS projects remains at over 75% and the majority of those currently being designed are similarly doomed. Perhaps more startling than the rate of failures is the fact that, in many cases, the failure may go unrecognized for several years.

How many executives demand straight and simple answers to such questions as "Is our computer's potential being fully exploited?"; "How much does our MIS contribute towards this organization's success?" and "What is the return on investment for our MIS budget?" Also surprising is the fact that many financial executives tolerate MIS projects that are associated with negative net present value while ignoring alternative investment projects which would contribute positively to the organization's financial wealth.

Skills and experience vital to successful MIS development typically include systems analysis and design, operations research, communications systems, computer programming, financial analysis, accounting, production control, marketing, project management, distribution analysis and management, and organizational development as well as a penetrating awareness of what the organization's vital functions really are. In short, it requires the full support and involvement of the organization's management, and sometimes additional resources from outside.

Recognizing these prerequisites, many organizations have adopted the taskforce approach for their MIS development efforts. Those who have not used this approach have virtually assured themselves of a failure, if not a critical disaster.

Of those using the taskforce concept, over half still fail because they lack either one of the essential skill or experience resources or the group process tools for effectively employing the taskforce resources. In view of the many pitfalls awaiting the would-be venturer into the MIS development field, is it any surprise that failures are so persistently high?

Manning the task force is one of the first stages at which an organization may go astray. Two procedures are frequently used. The first is aimed at directly transmitting skills and experience from organizations that have already successfully developed their own MIS by "raiding" experienced key personnel. This is a procedure which can sometimes backfire.

Not only is there uncertainty in knowing which organizations have successful MIS implementations, but it is usually difficult to determine who were the key people involved and, even more difficult, to motivate these individuals to make the move from a success environment to one of uncertainty and to stay there long enough to do the required job.

The second procedure consists of using an experienced consultant as part of the task force team. The consultant selected should be able to demonstrate a series of successful MIS implementations and be capable of readily identifying and correcting any lack of the necessary skills or experience in the task force.

Not only does the second procedure minimize the chance of a costly project failure but it has time and again proven to be the most economical route in the long run. This is because highly specialized skills, so critically important to the project design and implementation phases, do not have to be retained by the organization once the project is operating smoothly.

What are the payoffs to be expected from a successful MIS implementation? Some of the more important benefits include the automation of programmable, repetitive, albeit complex, decisions and activities, concise presentation of information to provide a wider range of decision alternatives for forward planning, and the determination of theoretically ideal solutions to logistic problems. Not included is the provision of larger volumes of data for management decision making. One of management's major problems is the over-abundance of irrelevant data crossing their desks every week.

In past years organizations have used their computer facilities to eliminate the need for clerical work and repetitive management decisions involved in a wide range of activities. Today, governments and industrial companies are turning more and more to computer stimulation to test strategic decisions that could mean the difference between success or failure of the entire organization.

In summary, an organization's MIS project budget is probably not being mis-spent if it has been evaluated against alternative financial investments and selected on this basis. To eliminate the risky factor in developing the final product there should also be assurance that all the prerequisite resources referred to earlier are available to the task force team.

Hiss To Examine 'Pumpkin Papers'

WASHINGTON (WP) — The justice department said it is taking steps to allow Alger Hiss to examine the "Pumpkin Papers" which played a key role in his perjury conviction 25 years ago.

Hiss, now 70 years old, has been seeking access to the papers and other documents as part of his continuing effort to prove his innocence. His efforts, along with those of others interested in the government's prosecution of him, could reopen examination of the controversial case — a rallying point for Liberals in the early 1950's and the event that brought Richard M. Nixon wide public attention.

Attorney Genral Edward H. Levi, in a letter to Hiss's lawyer released Wednesday, said that he has asked U.S. attorney Paul Curran in New York to open the containers holding five rolls of microfilm "if they are in fact located therein" and to take "prompt steps" to determine whether anything on the film cannot be shown to Hiss.

Although the Freedom of Information Act, under which Hiss requested access to the microfilm, allows a number of exemptions from making requested material available, Levi said that "no exemption will be invoked unless there is a compelling reason for doing so." The only exception Levi made was for information dealing with national security matters.

The "Pumpkin Papers," were dramatically produced in December 1949 by Hiss' principal accuser, Whittaker Chambers. Cambers had charged before the House Un-American activities Committee, of which Rep. Richard Nixon was a member, that Hiss has supplied him with military secrets in the 1930s. Chambers testified that both he and Hiss were spies for the Soviet Union. Hiss denied knowing Chambers or being a Soviet spy.

To support his charges, Chambers produced five rolls of microfilm that he said he had stored in a hollowed-out pumpkin on his western Maryland farm. Hiss was brought to trial on federal perjury charges in 1949, but the jury could not agree on a verdict. At his second trial, in late 1949, the government introduced new evidence, including documents allegedly copied on Hiss' personal typewriter.

Hiss was convicted of perjury in January 1950 and served more than three years of a five-year sentence.

In addition to the letter to Hiss, Levi wrote to Stephen W. Salant, a Washington, D.C., economist, and Peter H. Irons, of Summerville, Mass., a researcher interested in the Hiss case. Both had filed requests for access to the "Pumpkin Papers" and other documents.

Hiss had filed an administrative appeal under the Freedom of Information Act after his request to see the microfilm and other documents had been rejected. Levi said in his letter that he is still considering the other materials requested by Hiss.

Levi said that Hiss would "be granted access to the films, as a matter of descretion, to the extent that the review discussed herein permits a determination that this can be accomplished without jeapardizing the safety of the film or revealing national security information. A Justice Department spokesman said that Hiss would also probably be permitted to have the microfilm examined to determine its age, a matter of controversy at the time of the trial.

FULL-SCALE STUDY ON SOLAR HEATING

WATERLOO, Ont. (CP)—A team of researchers at University of Waterloo will spend the next year gathering data on the mass use of solar heating in Canada.

Financed by the National Research Council's division of building research, the study is intended to provide the answers to questions such as: Where will solar heating be most economical; what kinds of buildings are best suited for it; when will it become economic to make the switch and what kind of solar heating systems are best, and for what parts of Canada?

Principal members of the research team are Dr. Terry Hollands, a specialist in solar energy; Dr. T. E. Unny, a civil engineer; Prof. Kish Hahn of the university's department of computer system design, and James Orgill, project director.

The group will collect data on average temperatures in various parts of Canada and on wind velocities. Also to be studied is the intensity of solar radiation and the cost of various types of solar heat collector units and storage units.

All information will be fed into the university computer system.

"We believe it may be possible to build a house and heat it by solar energy alone," said Dr. Hollands, "but what we don't know is whether this is the best way to build it."

He said that this would involve a very expensive storage unit.

"We might find that the optimum arrangement for this country would be to provide enough storage capacity for a maximum of three days," he said, "with an auxiliary heating unit when it is needed.

Some people have been talking about a hybrid system using the collected solar energy as a heat source for a heatpump."

A heat pump is like an airconditioner in reverse. Instead of taking the heat out of a room it brings it from outside.

The researchers hope there will be the possibility of large savings in the use of fossil fuels. Approximately 40 per cent of Canada's energy demands are for space heating.

This Was a Cheeky Thing To Print, Diana Says

LONDON (Reuter) — British actress Diana Dors got a surprise when she came across a picture of a naked backside in a magazine — a caption underneath said it was hers.

Miss Dors, 42, a former pinup girl, said she was so upset by the picture she will take legal action against the magazine, Cockade.

"I have never appeared nude in public, and at my time of life, I don't intend to start," she said.

The picture was included among stills from a film called The Amorous Milkman in which Miss Dors stars with her husband, Alan Lake.

The mystery backside later was claimed by Jenny Westbrook, 26, who also appears in the film.

"The bottom is mine," Miss Westbrook said. "I would recognize it anywhere."

CIA Pushed Plans That Led to ECM

By BERNARD D. NOSSITER

LONDON (WP) — As far back as 25 years ago, the Central Intelligence Agency was secretly subsidizing private political organizations promoting European unity, according to a doctoral thesis written by the son of the secretary general of the European Movement, one of the groups said to have received funds.

According to the dissertation, the CIA, using a group of distinguished Americans and its own leaders as a cover, was pumping funds into the European Movement and its affiliates.

From 1947 until 1953, the European Movement and its offshoots are said to have spent an estimated $2.8 million. Of this, the thesis says about $1 million came from secret U.S. funds and another $170,000 from American business firms. The Washington contribution was put at 38 per cent of the total.

It has been known for some years that the CIA secretly financed political and propaganda activities in Europe, such as Radio Free Europe, which broadcasts to Communist nations, youth and labor organizations, and even some publications, among them the British magazine Encounter. The European Movement, however, has not been mentioned among these.

A detailed account of the relationship is given in a 1962 doctoral thesis written at St. Antony's College, Oxford, by Francois Xavier Rebattet. He was in a unique position to search the records and interview those involved because his father, Georges, was deputy secretary general and later secretary general of the European Movement.

Rebattet's thesis, "The European Movement' 1945-1953: A study in National and International Non-Governmental Organizations Working for European Unity," was first brought to public attention by "Time Out," a lively London weekly.

Interviewed by telephone at his Paris apartment, Georges Rebattet emphasized that the bulk of the CIA money went to finance the European Movement's youth arm and not his headquarters. He estimated the U.S. subsidy to his own secretariat at no more than $10,000 to $20,000 a year.

"We knew there were people of the CIA" on the American committee transmitting funds, he said, "but we were not so very interested."

Many of the European Movement leaders, he recalled, had fought in the wartime resistance and had met Allen Dulles, then in the Office of Strategic Services (OSS) and later CIA director. Thus Rebattet said, it seemed natural to work with Dulles after the war.

Rebattet said that the Americans had not pressed any policy or program on the Europeans that the Europeans themselves rejected. "We were not under pressure from the American committee," he said, "and they were not insisting too much."

He remembers that the Americans had urged in private talks the formation of a European Defence Community, a project to overcome French fears of a rearmed Germany by creating a Western European army. But here too, according to Rebattet, the Americans acted with discretion. The project was ultimately defeated by the French assembly.

The younger Rebattet's thesis underscores the heavy CIA influence in the American Committee on United Europe, the body that transmited the funds across the Atlantic. Its chairman was William J. Donovan, the wartime boss of OSS, the CIA predecessor. Allen Dulles was vice chairman: Thomas Braden, a CIA official and now a columnist, was executive director, and Charles M. Spofford, a New York lawyer identified in the thesis as a CIA man, was a director.

(Braden, reached for comment in Washington, said his tenure with the committee was before he became a CIA officer and, as far as he knew, the funds raised in the United States were genuinely private contributions, not money from the CIA.

("So far as I know, there was no CIA money in it," Braden said. "What happened after I left, I don't know.")

Another Director was Gen. Walter Bedell Smith, head of the CIA from 1950 to 1953 when the U.S. funds began flowing in quantity to the private European pressure groups.

Prominent members of the American committee included David Dubinsky of the Ladies Garment Workers Union, Arthur Goldberg, then general counsel of the CIO; Conrad Hilton, the hotel tycoon; and Lucius Clay, former commander of U.S. forces in Germany. It was an elite group, dominated by corporation executives and bankers, and limited to 600 members.

Rebattet describes the money channeled through the committee to Europe as "State Department secret funds."

Rebattet does not disclose which members of the European Movement knew that secret U.S. funds were helping finance their activities. His father thinks that the movemet's first chairman, Duncan Sandys, was aware of Washington's aid. Sandys, the son-in-law of Winston Churchill, was to become a minister in a Conservative government.

Paul-Henri Spaak, the second chairman, clearly knew. He insisted, however, that the U.S. funds pay only for special projects so that the movement would be protected from being labeled as an American tool. Spaak later became Belgium's prime minister.

PIPE BOOM ARRIVES —VALDEZ KNOWS IT

By WALLACE TURNER

VALDEZ, Alaska (NYT) — The pipeline boom has arrived. Liquor sales are up. So are taxes. Schools are overcrowded all day and bars are packed on weekends. Cocaine is here. Prostitutes work the bars. Rents soar. Raw sewage pours into the bay because the treatment plant is overwhelmed.

Yet this little town, population 800 four years ago, 4,600 now and headed perhaps to 10,000 next year, has not collapsed under the pressure. The oldtimers here consoled themselves than when it's over and the pipeline terminal is finished across the bay, Valdez will be somewhat larger than it was, and will have many facilities for an easier life that it lacked before.

There is some uneasiness. Andrea Harrison's family has lived around here for more than 50 years, and she was born in Old Valdez 21 years ago. That site has been used for storage for the 48-inch pipe used by Alyeska Pipeline Co. to bring the Prudhoe Bay oil tankers that will load here.

"I guess I could find the site of our house," she said. "Pipe has been stacked right where it stood." The old town was moved to a more sheltered pace after the 1964 post-earthquake tidal wave washed it out. Her father, a longshoreman, was one of about 30 men drowned by the wave.

Miss Harrison drives news media tours of the pipeline terminal for Alyeska. She is paid $5.50 an hour, and takes home about $1,000 a month. As a life-long resident, she sees changes and one of the major ones is that "new people seem to own so much of everything. It used to be we'd go into a bar and know everybody. But no more. Not even the waitresses and bartenders."

Many other young people here also have interrupted their college educations to take pipeline jobs. Martha Kelsey, whose father is the Standard Oil distributor, is a timekeeper in the terminal work camp and Mike Bruitt drives a bus 12 hours seven days a week.

Miss Harrison's grandfather, Andy Day, once owned the hillside across the bay where the terminal now is being constructed by a work force of 1,600 which will grow in a year to 3,500. The girl's grandmother, Oma Day, now 86, sold the hillside for $1 million a few years ago.

Andy Day's fish cannery boilers rust on the rocky point, and his granddaughter points them out to photographers who seem more interested in pictures of the docks or of the rows of 510,000 barrel petroleum storage tanks being built.

As elsewhere along the pipeline route, rents here have jumped and housing is limited. The usual pattern is that a one-bedroom apartment that would have gone for $150 a month four years ago now rents for $450.

In a widely publicized increase that is one of the most infamous in Alaska, rent on a shabby apartment occupied by two schoolteachers was raised from $285 to $1,600 a month by a new owner. But the explanation was that a new owner, a contractor, wanted the tenants to move so he could rebuild the place as a dormitory for his employes.

Crime is up. It is mostly shoplifting or other larceny, and burglary. There have been no armed robberies. Police Chief David Oehler said, "Our business, like everybody else's has picked up quite a bit."

Mercenaries Hired

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The U.S. government is looking into the recruitment of Americans as mercenaries to fight in Rhodesia, a U.S. state department spokesman said. The spokesman said a recruiting drive is being conducted through gun enthusiast magazines by a man named Robert Brown of Phoenix Associates in Boulder, Colo. He added the state department is also investigating and there is a strong possibility Americans serving as mercenaries are in danger of losing their citizenship. Americans are barred from serving in foreign armies.

Trevino, Heard Had No Chance

OAK BROOK, Ill. (AP) — Nobody had a chance to invoke the lightning rule in the $200,000 Western Open golf tournament Friday.

It was a scary, painful experience for two-time United States champion Lee Trevino and Jerry Heard along with several other players hit by electrical bolts.

Trevino suffered back burns and Heard leg burns and had to be removed from the thunderstorm-struck Butler National course to a hospital as the tourney's second round was cancelled with half the field home.

Bobby Nichols, Tony Jacklin and Jim Ahern also got lightning jolts. Nichols went to the hospital complaining of a headache after a bolt struck nearby.

Jacklin had a club knocked 15 feet away just as he began a swing. Ahern was leaning on his putter when a charge knocked it out of his hands.

Most seriously hurt were Trevino and Heard, huddled under an unbrella which proved a lightning rod. Both were held in a nearby hospital for overnight observation.

Arnold Palmer, who went into today's rescheduled second round still trailing pacesetting Dave Graham by three strokes, even got a scare in the middle of the 14th fairway.

"A bolt struck nearby and I just dropped my club," said Palmer, who had lost two strokes to par when play was cancelled.

Graham, who shot a course record 65, six-under-par, in Thursday's opening round, was just teeing off on No. 10 and was five-under-par when play was called.

"I heard the siren blow and I made a beeline for the clubhouse," said the Australian pro.

Half the 156-player field had finished when the sudden thunderstorm hit, but all second-round scores were erased. The final two rounds will be played Sunday.

Trevino, Heard and Mike Fetchick, playing in the same threesome, had just played to the 13th green when play was halted at 5:04 p.m. EDT.

Fetchick elected to hasten to the clubhouse, but Trevino and Heard sought a low spot near the green and got under an umbrella held by Heard between his legs.

A lightning bolt apparently struck the umbrella and Trevino began shouting, "I'm hit, I think my shoulder is broken."

Heard complained of a groin injury.

Trevino's caddy, Ned Carmoe, said he ran from a nearby concession stand after the bolt hit. "At first I thought Mr. Trevino was kidding, laying there," said the caddy. "But he said he felt like he had died."

The players generally said the storm hit too quickly for many to invoke the lightning rule and get off the course.

Tom Watson did that in last week's storm-pelted U.S. Open at nearby Medinah Country Club at which time Trevino said, "lightning will never strike me.

"God is on my side."

Racing: No Such Thing As a Winning System

There was the chance twist of the radio dial the other day and the voice was that of Jack Short, loud and clear. No, it wasn't as "the Voice of the Races" for which he is more noted at Exhibition Park and around the province. Rather he was the guest on a talk show and, as always, it made interesting listening.

Jack has a thousand race stories he can tell and if there isn't time in any one day to get them all in, it's unfortunate that's all.

And the one, over-riding message that came out perfectly clear was that there is no such thing as a winning system in horse racing and those who say they win all the time usually don't. "There is no such thing as a system that has been arrived at, or concocted, that is foisted on the public," said Short, "that is worth a plugged dime. All they will do is make you lose more money than you can afford to lose."

Sure, says Jack, if you want some fun, go out and bet the horses and maybe make $10. Look at the Sun, or the Province or listen to my Crystal Ball . . . you'll get a guide and you'll be betting logical horses. You might get a day when I'm hot, or Archie (McDonald) is hot or Terry (Ross) is hot . . . the form is hot . . ."

Make your bet $2 he suggested. "You won't win a lot, but you won't lose a lot. It's when you start betting those fives, 10s and 20s, it hursts . . . and nobody likes to lose."

"It's knowing when to quit," he advised. "You can win a few thousand, but if you think you can beat them . . . if you think you've got a system . . . there's no way."

And Short doesn't bet, not since he started his "Crystal Ball" selections And they are usually the chalk horse. But every once in a while he reaches down for a deep one and it comes home in front.

That's when he chortles: "That's another for the old crystal ball." If some racing fans swear by his selections, he does better than alright most of the time but, as he says, when "the form is hot", that's when he does best. And so do the other selectors.

Short's favorite B.C. bred is George Royal who won the San Juan Capistrano at Santa Anita, among other victories, and also represented Canada in the International at Laurel, Maryland. Another good one was Quality Quest who won the Longacres Mile and set a record for North America at the time.

So there it is, today's tidbit for the horsey set and if you still want to go to the track, do as Jack suggests: use someone else's knowledge, have fun, but don't bet more than you can afford to lose.

Meanwhile, if Archie Browning is becoming a successful boxla coach — his Shamrocks unbeaten in six games at home — he is also a better golfer than he is a fisherman. On Monday he did it up proud. He not only was the chief organizer and master of ceremonies of the Esquimalt Police tournament at Gorge Vale, but he was also the winner. His gross, 84, and his handicap, under review. And if Bill Ferguson and Bob Harvey are clamoring for a rematch, who can blame them? But there's no way. Incidentally, a bigger winner was constable Bill Wyatt. He won the draw for a trip for two to Hawaii from Totem Travel and Sun Tours. Wyatt was low gross winner in 1973 and 1974, so the prize actually was well deserved.

Then, on Wednesday, horrors! First there was that Western Canada Hockey League announcement that 10 teams out of 12 would make it to the league playoffs next year. That's a jump of two. But why didn't the governors go all the way and opt for all 12 teams. Because then in mid-season, they could have dropped two, and looked better than they do now. Sorry, but the move still doesn't sell, just as it didn't when first proposed last season.

There's the note too that Danny Green of our town is leading the Ontario Junior "A" Lacrosse League in scoring with 106 points in 15 games and all from the field as he isn't being used on the power play. Danny is playing for Peterborough. He was a former teammate of Kevin Alexander, who has the same total, for McDonalds. And my, what a pair they would make if they got together again. And also, I see where congratulations are in order for a former Times cartoonist. Mort Graham, who got his start on the Times sport pages, now is Vice-President-Director of Creative Services of Hayhurst Advertising, Vancouver office.

Sooke Turns Tables

The records of Phil Berry and Seaboard Construction didn't impress Sooke Merchants.

Berry has a 5-0 won-lost pitching record while Seaboard's is 15-3 in the Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League.

But Sooke, 6-12, turned the tables on Berry and his Seaboard mates 1-0 Friday in the opening game of the 12-team McGinnis Invitational tournamest at Central Park.

Action picked up this morning with a total of 15 games scheduled on Central Park's two diamonds today. The double-knockout tournament winds up Sunday.

Sooke, beaten 1-0 on an unearned run by Seaboard in league play Thursday, in turn did it to the Contractors Friday. Norm Goudie's leadoff single and a costly two-base error in the ninth inning beat Berry and Seaboard.

Ron Fedesenko blanked Seaboard on six hits. He worked his way out of ticklish situations in both the seventh and eighth innings. Seaboard's Paul Morrison was stranded on third base in the seventh and Vern Benn was left on second in the eighth. Each time, the potential winning run was in scoring position with only one out.

Former Victoria Cougar forward Bruce Cowick says he prefers to stay in the National Hockey League but that he has had two "interesting" offers from clubs in the rival World Hockey Association.

Cowick's NHL rights shifted to St. Louis when the Blues claimed the Esquimalt grad on waivers from Washington Capitals recently. Cowick, spending the off-season at Shawnigan Lake, said Minnesota and Winnipeg of the WHA have expressed interest in him.

Fatigue Is No Handicap

TORONTO (CP) — A dead-tired Carol Mann burned up St. George's Golf Club with a record-shattering 69 Friday in the opening round of a $60,080 Ladies' Professional Golf Association tournament.

The 34-year-old native of Buffalo, N.Y., now living in Towson, Md., had nines of 34-35 to shave one stoke off the ladies' record set by Canadian Jocelyn Bourassa in 1972.

Miss Mann, who was up into the early hours of Friday morning trying to sort out the troubled businesses of the LPGA, of which she is president, had seven birdies and three bogeys in her round over the par-73 6265-yard layout.

Miss Mann, whose off-course business it is to find a replacement for ousted LPGA executive director E. M. (Bud) Erickson, said the additional duties have affected her but she's been able to survive due to "the strength I've had to muster off the golf course."

WCHL Boosts Financial Aid

Times News Services

The Western Canada Major Junior Hockey League has reached an agreement in principle to two financial arrangements with the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association.

WCHL president Ed Chynoweth said in Lethbridge Friday that the league will guarantee the four western provincial branches $24,000 in financial aid for the 1975-76 season.

The sum, to be ratified by all parties prior to Aug. 15, represents an increase of $18,000 over the total donated by the league last year.

The WCHL also tentatively agreed on a fee to tier two-clubs releasing players to the major junior league. "We'll pay $1,500," said Chynoweth, who noted that past payments varied from $500 to $2,000.

CAHA officials met with the WCHL during the four-day WCHL meeting in Lethbridge.

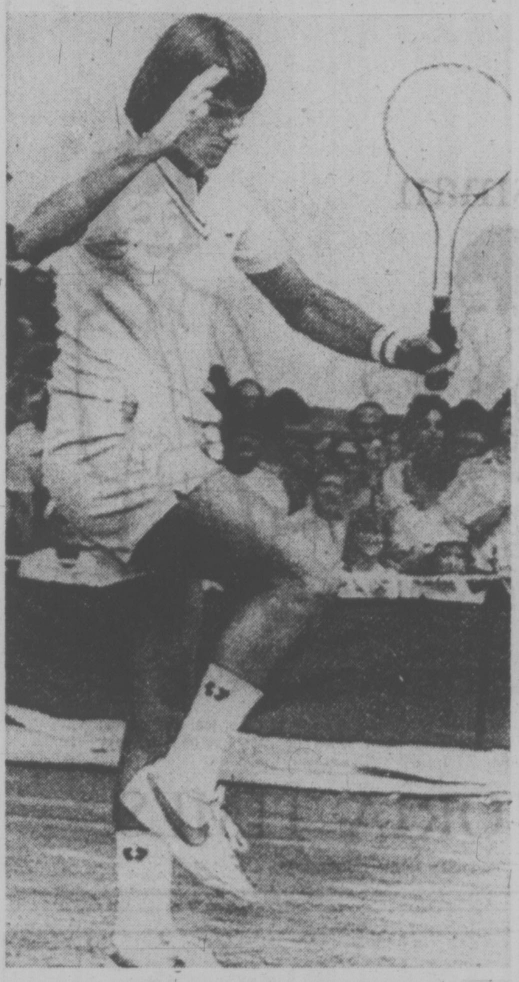
Wimbledon Jammed By Record Throngs



VICTORY DANCE is performed by Jimmy Connors during his 6-1, 6-2, 6-2 fourth-round win over Australia's Phil Dent Friday at Wimbledon. The triumph put Connors in quarter-finals. (AP Wirephoto)

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Record crowds are jamming the All-England Club to see if Jimmy Connors and Chris Evert can retain their Wimbledon titles against the world's top tennis players.

The remaining men's singles quarter-final places were to be decided today, after Connors, Sweden's Bjorn Borg, and Roscoe Tanner of Lookout Mountain, Tenn., advanced into the final eight Friday.

A crowd of 34,000 shuffled shoulder-to-shoulder between courts to watch Friday's play, bringing the five-day attendance to more than 163,000. That's 10,000 more than the all-time attendance record for the 12 days of the United States Open at Forest Hills, set last year.

"It seems certain that our all-time record will be broken," said an All-England Club official. The record is 306,111, set last year.

Connors, 22, from Belleville, Ill., played with a master's touch Friday in beating Phil Dent of Australia 6-1, 6-2, 6-2.

Borg, protected by police off court as hordes of screaming female fans deluged him wherever he went, had to work harder to beat veteran Marty Riessen of the U.S. 6-2, 8-6, 4-6, 6-1.

Today's matches for the remaining quarter-final spots pitted Arthur Ashe of the U.S. against Britain's Graham Stilwell; Sandy Mayer of the U.S. against Guillermo Vilas of Argentina; Cliff Richey of the U.S. against Raul Ramirez of Mexico; Tom Okker of The Netherlands vs. Alex Metreveli of the Soviet Union, and an all-Australian clash between Tony Roche and Ken Rosewall.

Meanwhile, the top seven women's seeds were through to the fourth round, with Miss Evert, 20, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., looking unbeatable against Japan's Kazuko Sawamatsu 6-2, 6-2.

Billie Jean King, 31, who said this tourney would be her last major event as a singles player, posted a 6-2, 6-2 victory over Julie Anthony of Santa Monica, Calif.

Meanwhile, some of the players were unhappy about the state of Wimbledon's hallowed grass courts, which were looking half-baked after a long dry spell.

"They're uneven and you get a lot of bad bounces," said Vilas, the No. 4 seed. "But at least all the players have the same problem."

Estep, stumbling in the baseline rust of an outer court, yelled across the net to Tanner: "Why don't we just move outside to the cow pasture?"

"That's where we are," Tanner replied.

But watching the lightning-fast serve of Tanner—once measured at 140 miles per hour — some players said the dry, dusty conditions may help the big servers by keeping the ball low and making returns impossible.

Sunday Racing Request Refused

VANCOUVER (CP) — City council has again rejected a request for Sunday horse racing at Exhibition Park.

The request by the Pacific National Exhibition board of directors was turned down 7 to 4 by council.

Aldermen said the parking and traffic problems caused by the PNE were bad enough for area residents without adding Sunday racing.

EX-DOLPHINS TO MEMPHIS

SENATOBIA, Miss. (AP) — Memphis Southmen welcomed former Miami Dolphins Jim Kiick, Larry Csonka and Paul Warfield to the World Football League with a physical examination Friday.

The former Dolphin stars joined 42 veterans of last year's 17-3 Southmen squad who underwent physicians' scrutiny in preparation for the beginning of pre-season drills.

The Southmen training camp opened Monday with 75 rookies trying to knock veterans out of jobs. Most of those rookies will be gone by the end of next week, and only a few are expected to be left by the time the season opens in five weeks.

Penguin Players Uneasy

TORONTO (CP) — Players of the bankrupt Pittsburgh Penguins franchise may seek free agent status soon if the money problems don't improve, Alan Eagleson, executive-director of the NHL Players' Association, said Friday.

Eagleson, in a phone interview from Newfoundland where he is vacationing, said improvement might be in the form of a new owner or operating capital for the National hockey League team.

"We've had lawyers in Pittsburgh check fully into the situation and their view is that bankruptcy, by itself, constitutes a breach of the players' contracts," said Eagleson.

"Also, many players have not received their performance bonuses, which violates their contracts. Most of them are paid on a 12-month basis and, when one pay check doesn't arrive, their contracts will be breached. If they file notice, they'd be free agents in two weeks. I know Owchar (Penguin player Dennis) has missed some pay already."

Eagleson emphasized that the Penguin players and the NHLPA would do everything possible to keep the team in operation.

Eagleson is lawyer for five Penguin players — Owchar, Syl Apps, Dave Burrows, Bob Kelly and Rick Kehoe.

The Penguins went into bankruptcy receivership two weeks ago with $6.5 million in debts. They owed $528,000 to the Internal Revenue Service for employees' withholding taxes, $1 million to the NHL which kept the team afloat last season, and Equibank sued the team for $5 million in debts.

Eagleson said July 15 is that latest the players can wait. He said he has six inquiries from other NHL teams for his two top clients, centre Apps and defenceman Burrows. He also said some Penguin players have been talking to World Hockey Association teams.

Violence in Locker Room

By The Associated Press

Friday night's most exciting American League baseball action took place in dressing-rooms at Baltimore and Arlington, Tex.

Texas slugger Jeff Burroughs exchanged punches with one teammate and had to be restrained by manager Billy Martin from going after another before the Rangers' 2-0, 5-8 split of a twi-night doubleheader with the Minnesota Twins.

And at Baltimore, Detroit manager Ralph Houk allegedly cuffed a Baltimore newspaperman before his Tigers dropped a 3-2 decision to the Orioles.

In other action on the field, Boston Red Sox regained first place in the East Division by trouncing New York Yankees 9-1, Oakland A's stretched their lead in the West to 5½ games with a 12-4 rout of California Angels while second-place Kansas City Royals were losing 4-3 to Chicago White Sox and Cleveland Indians topped Milwaukee Brewers 6-1.

Burroughs, accused in a local paper by an anonymous teammate of loafing in the outfield, exchanged punches in the clubhouse with Joe Lovitto and Martin then had to break up a potential fight between Burroughs and Jim Fregosi.

Burroughs, the most valuable player in the American League in 1974, later shook hands with Lovitto but called Fregosi a "backstabber."

An assault complaint was filed against Houk for allegedly "roughing up" Phil Hersh, a Baltimore writer. Hersh filed the complaint with Baltimore police after he said Houk assaulted him in the Tigers' locker room minutes before the game.

According the Hersh, he was conducting an interview when Houk called him over to discuss a story in which he was quoted as saying the Tigers had a "losing ball club."

Delesalle compiled 51.65 out of a possible 60 points in Friday's opening events.

Barkley Next Red Wing Pilot

DETROIT (AP) — Detroit Red Wings of the National Hockey League have scheduled a news conference for Monday amid reports that Alex Delvecchio will step down as coach and Doug Barkley, 33, will replace him.

It is reported that Delvecchio, who would stay on as general manager, all but confirmed the change in an interview Friday with Detroit Free Press.

"Doug is my top candidate. Don't spoil our press conference we have set up for Monday. We want to make the announcement ourselves."

Following a meeting Friday with Wings owner Bruce Norris, Delvecchio said he thought the team needed a younger coach.

Laperriere To Coach

MONTREAL (CP) — Jacques Laperriere, who starred on defence for Montreal Canadiens of the National Hockey League from 1963-64 until suffering torn ligaments in his left knee during the 1973-74 season, was named Friday as coach of Montreal Juniors of the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League.

Laperriere succeeds Larry Regan, who resigned after Montreal was eliminated in QMJHL semi-final play last spring.

A native of Rouyn, Que., Laperriere, 33, played with Montreal Junior Canadiens and Hull-Ottawa Canadiens of the now-defunct Eastern Professional Hockey League before graduating to the NHL.

The Pot Has Been Sweetened For Open Stock Car Drivers

By JIM CRERAR
Times Staff

There's a new game show out at Western Speedway. It's called double your money and it's open to all open competition stock car drivers.

Here's how it works: You enter the July 5 Carling International super-stock race and get a crack at first-place money of $1,000. That's double the usual $500 payoff and is part of a total purse of $5,000 for the night, which is also double the customary kitty.

By sweetening the pot, Speedway officials hope to assure a good field for the 100-lap main event. Two of the first three open competitions at Western, May 3 and last weekend, fizzled out because of lack of entrants.

The May 3 opener was cancelled because few of the drivers had their cars ready. In fact, none of the other tracks in the Pacific Northwest had even started.

Last week's open show conflicted with the stock car race on the Westwood road circuit at Vancouver and the drivers opted for that one instead of lining up for a ferry to the Island.

"Getting top drivers here has always been a problem because of ferry travel, especially in mid-summer," Western Speedway's Barry Rankin explained.

"This is the first year we've had a full open series," he continued. "We went to it to accommodate a number of our drivers who moved to the open class, but they're running a lot more open competitions at other tracks, too."

Island drivers in open competition this year include Ross Surgenor, Rick O'Dell, Terry Forsyth, Larry Pollard, Roy Haslam, Gary Kershaw, Bill Price and Campbell River's George Stuart. In addition, Hershel McGriff of Bridal Veil, Ore., has been driving Dick Midgley's 1974 Chevelle, which he piloted to second place last weekend at Westwood. He entered the July 5 race this week.

Haslam holds the lead going into the July 5 race, second of the series, with 176 points. He's followed by Kershaw with 165 and Stuart with 147.

The ferry scramble doesn't seem to have had any effect on the International Drivers' Challenge (IDC) series or the Washington Racing Association modified sprint car programs at Western. The reason, Rankin explained, is that both are basically road shows and competitors are willing to put up with travel inconveniences.

That's a good thing because this year's six-race IDC series shapes up as a dandy. It opens Saturday, July 12, at Tacoma Spanaway and moves to Olympia Tenino July 13, Western Speedway Tuesday, July 15, the dirt track at Skagit July 18, back to Spanaway July 19 and winds up with the championship race July 20 at Portland Speedway.

Surgenor won the series last year and is expected to race at Western even if he doesn't drive all six races. Forsyth (second last year) and Haslam (tied for fourth) plan to go the route.

The IDC usually attracts a half dozen or so California drivers and the big name this year is Roger Ward, Indianapolis 500 winner in 1959 and 1962.

His entry is in and his credentials stretch halfway around the Western Speedway oval. He started 15 Indys; he's a two-time U.S. Auto Club national driving champion, he ranks fourth on the USAC all-time winning list with 24 championships between 1957 and 1966, and he never finished lower than third in national standings between 1959 and 1964.

The really intriguing thing about Ward, though, is that he came out of retirement last fall and drove a claimer, of all things, in Phoenix. Now he's driving a super stock out of Rosemead, Calif., near Los Angeles.

Volleyball Series Makes City Stop

Victoria volleyball fans will get a chance to see an international women's match between Canada and Japan, July 25, at the University of Victoria gym.

The match is part of a seven-city, double round-robin series among Japanese, Russian, United States and Canadian national teams. The series opens in Montreal July 17, moves to Ottawa July 18, then it's Toronto July 21, Winnipeg July 22 and Saskatoon July 26. It ends July 26 in Vancouver.

Players on the Canadian team, coached by Moo Park of Korea, will be Kathy Bickerstaff, Diane Murray, Debbie Heeps and Carol Bishop of Vancouver, Burnaby's Audrey Vanderelden, Patty Olson of Surrey, Regyna Armonas of Belleville, Claire Lloyd, Connie Lebrun and Mary Dempster of Winnipeg, Regina's Rene Robertson and Betty Baxter of Brooks, Alta.

'Cruelty' in Rodeo Events Charged by U.S. Humane Group

WASHINGTON (WP) — Early in the second event at a recent performance of the Capital Centre Championship Rodeo near here, a cowboy on horseback charged across the arena after a fast-moving calf. He tossed his rope and it landed perfectly around the calf's neck. When the rope tightened, the calf was flipped 180 degrees in the air, landing with a thud on its back. The crowd gasped.

A few minutes later, the defeated calf was lying in the dirt, the rope around its neck. Before the cowboy remounted, however, the riderless horse to which the other end of the rope was tied, backed up a couple of steps, tightening the noose. The calf sounded off mightily.

Examples such as these have prompted naturlaists and humane societies to attack rodeos, charging them with cruelty to animals. "All you have to do is take a look," said Patrick Parks, executive vice president of the Humane Society of the U.S. The HSUS has been as persistent a critic of rodeos as any group and two years ago issued a report that began, "a calf roped and busted even once suffers injury from the scientific point of view."

Ted Baily, advance man and announcer for the Capital Centre Rodeo and a member of the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association (PRCA) sanctioning body, disagreed entirely. He described HSUS as being "on the fanatical fringe of these humane groups" and called rodio critics "misguided people who don't really understand what is involved here."

Baily noted that the PRCA and the American Humane Association have agreed on a set of rules concerning the care of rodeo animals. A veterinarian must be present for each show, for example. Baily said rodeo judges insure that the rules are adhered to because they assess penalty points for violations, thereby reducing the cowboys' chances for prize money. As for calf-roping, he said, "It looks terrible, but it isn't. It doesn't hurt them at all."

One thing is certain: Given the viewpoints of HSUS and the PRCA, it would be difficult for any two groups to consider any one subject and arrive at such contrasting conclusions.

Seemingly entrenched as part of the North American way of life, rodeos are held almost everywhere, from the smallest towns to New York City. There are about 3,000 annually in the U.S., but only about 600 are sanctioned by the PRCA.

Jo B. Morgan, attorney for the American Humane Association (AYA) said, "We don't approve rodeos but we encourage them to abide by the rules that they adopted themselves. The rules were the result of a lot of pressure from Humane groups. We met with the rodeo people, and they were receptive.

"There's no rodeo that completely satisfies us," said Morgan, adding that it was AHA's philosophy to try to "influence" the rodeos to conform to the rules rather than to try to "abolish" rodeos, which he said would be "impossible" to do in some parts of the country.

The Humane Society of the U.S., however, does not agree entirely with the AHA's approach. "For example, there's a requirement for a sled to be there to drag away injured or dead animals," HSUS's Patrick Parks said. "But if a rodeo is conducted without pain, there would be no need for a sled."

The Humane Society believes all cattle-ropping events should be banned in every state. "An investigatory study of rodeo roping events has found that in calf-roping a 225-pound calf is usually travelling at approximately 27 mph at the moment it is lassoed," the HSUS rerort declared. "The resulting force exerted on the calf's body is enough to injure the calf, sometimes severely."

The HSUS' report cited "broken limbs, dazed or unconscious animals, flank sores, open wounds, abrasions, spur marks in the neck and shoulder areas, and broken horns" from investigations of rodeos in Montana, Wyoming, and Colorado over a two-year period.

The HSUS study came out strongly against the flank strap, a belt that is tied around the animals' body near the hind legs before riding contests. The study said that "Rodeo horses and bulls buck because of (a) pressure of the flank strap cinched tightly around the animal's flanks, applying pressure to sensitive lumbar nerves, to the inguinal canal area, and, occasinally, on the repuce of the male animal, and (b) digging into the animal's flesh by the cowboy's spurs."

Joan Blue, vice-president of the American Horse Protection Soceity and member of the board of the Washington Humane Society, said, "If we tied those things around the gentlemen who ride the horses, we would have some great ballet dancers. Unfortunately, we're not allowed."

Rodeo spokesman Baily said such charges were unfounded.

The flank strap, he said, was padded with sheepskin and served as "almost a cue" for the animal to buck. 'It's like your belt, taken up one notch extra," he said. "It's an assist. The animal knows when the gate opens he's expected to do his stuff. I'd hate to say it was an irritant; it's more of a signal."

"Bucking horses have a real good life. They work about eight seconds. It's been figured out they work about five minutes for the year. They're not really overworked. The horses here may not be used for two weeks when they get home. They're rested up."

Baily said, "it doesn't make sense" to think that anyone owning rodeo animals would allow them to be mistreated.

"It's (a matter of) dollars and cents," he said. "The producer, the man who owns the stock, wouldn't jeopardize the animal."

The only event that Raily would not defend was steer-roping, which is banned in 47 states. "I in no way can defend that event," he said. It consists of roping the steer, flipping it to the ground by catching its hind legs with the rope, dragging it about and dazing it, and tying its legs.

HSUS, according to its report, "is determined to put an end to all cruelty at rodeos," meaning nothing less than ending rodeos in their present form.

Baily said PRCA has given rodeos greater respectability because of its rules; HSUS says the rules aren't enough. The beat goes on.

MAN ORDERED DOG TO ATTACK POLICE

EDMONTON (CP) — An Edmontor resident who last year ordered his German shepherd dog to attack a police officer has been sentenced to a day in jail and fined $350.

Henry Herbert Fischer, 24, pleaded guilty before provincial Judge Dean Saks to a charge of criminal negligence. Court was told the incident occurred last December when police were called to help settle a domestic dispute.

Fischer, holding the dog on a leash, ordered the police to leave his property after they had spoken with his wife. Then he released the dog and ordered the dog to attack the policemen, court was told.

The dog bit Constable Wilfred Viitala on the hand, elbow and buttock. When the policeman drew his gun, Fischer recalled the dog, which he said had been trtined to kill.

Summer Victoria: Lots of Music and Laughter In Busy Two-Month Schedule

CONCERTS IN THE COURT

Summer sunsets in Victoria for the last three years have been highlighted by delightful music emanating from the attractive enclosure of Heritage Court in the Provincial Museum Complex.

Visitors and residents have flocked to the scene and the legend of Victoria's free summer music has spread far and wide.

Founder and artistic and executive director of the Victoria Summer Festival, Laszlo Gati, has completed plans for his fourth season opening July 14 in Heritage Court.

This summer's festival will follow the format of previous years. There will be Monday, Wednesday and Friday concerts, two each evening with different programs. Concert times will be 6 p.m. and 7:15

There will be 30 of these concerts featuring popular symphonic music, ballet and opera selections played by the Summer Festival Orchestra conducted by Maestro Gati. A variety of guest soloists will be featured.

There will also be six Sunday concerts in Greater Victoria parks. First of these will take place July 6 at Saanich's Strawberry Festival at Beaver Lake and the second at Oak Bay's Henderson Park Pavilion on Cedar Hill Cross Road, July 13 at 7:30 p.m.

Other sites will be Beacon Hill's Cameron Bandshell, Esquimalt's Kinsmen Gorge Park and Saanich's Cedar Hill Community Centre, the last incorporating the opening concert of the Shawnigan Summer School of the Arts and taking place Aug. 3 with an international artist as soloist.

All the park concerts, except Henderson, are scheduled for 2:30 p.m.

A corollary of events surrounds the Heritage Court concerts, which will be performed this year on the new mobile stage purchased by the B.C. Dept. of Public Works. (The stage will provide two levels for the orchestra and is complete with lighting and sound equipment.)

The festival aspect is carried forward in film and art showings, a production in the adjoining Newcombe Auditorium of a series of Gilbert and Sullivan excerpts, and a Friday evening bonus of half-hour carillon concerts by provincial carillonneur Herman Bergink.

Also adjoining Heritage Court is the Provincial Archives building and here there will be a first exhibition from the new provincial collection of 520 art works.

The exhibition will span the concert period of the festival, from July 14 through Aug. 17 and will be open to view Monday through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m.

Special film showings will take place in Newcombe Auditorium July 14, 16 and 18, and Aug. 4, 6, 8, 11, 13, 15, at 8:30 p.m.

All the festival events are calculated to enhance a holiday mood, all are family affairs and all, thanks to financial support from various levels of government, are free to the public.

In the event of a rainy evening, concerts will take place in Newcombe Auditorium.

Castro Plans Visit

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The Cuban news agency Prensa Latina reports in a dispatch from Havana that Premier Fidel Castro has accepted an invitation to visit Trinidad-Tobago in the near future. It said the invitation was extended by Prime Minister Eric Williams of Trinidad-Tobago at the end of a week's visit to Havana.

SMILE SHOW PUFFS ALONG

It will be the 23rd year for Jerry Gosley's Summer Smile Show when it opens its annual run July 5 at McPherson Playhouse.

And veteran entertainer Gosley is still featured among its talented cast. He may huff and puff a bit but he'll probably still bring the house down.

The show, in fact, always something of a family affair, is more so than ever this year with Anton Gosley, talented and highly trained elder son as designer, and brother Tim joining the cast as well as assisting with the design. Tim is a third-year student of fine arts at the Univeristy of Alberta.

With the exception of a few dates pre-empted by other organizations, the Smile Show will run nightly at the Mac through Aug. 30. Curtain time is 8 p.m.

Most of the cast are experienced Smile Show people and those who are newcomers have been turning in notable performances elsewhere.

Glynis Leyshon, for example, in the past Victoria season appeared in a cameo role in The Hostage and won priase for her one-woman show at Open Space, Alison Mary Fagan, as well as her Miss Heasam in Bastion's production of Butley.

Others assembled to portray villains, heroes, sillies, animals and tribal ritualists are Dan Costain, who has been working with Kaleidoscope Children's Theatre and was formerly with Feux Follets and the Charlottetown Festival; Paul Liittich, also of Kaleidoscope, and Steve Ivings, the young man of many voices.

A former dancer with the Butchart Gardens Revue, Maura Hall, has joined the cast and regular dancers Lana Check, Brenda Shaw, Marina Morgan and Rick Simmonds are back in the action.

In the pit will be Al Denoni and his electrovox and Ben Manning on drums.

Production numbers include a spoof on the kings and queens of England composed by UVic's Chet Lambertson, a circus conceived and directed by Liittich, and a early search for the King's Breakfast adapted by Smile Show director Bebe Eversfield.

As to Gosley himself, he has revived the shiny Capt. Vancouver, offering his high-perch views on the capital scene, and the irascible Old Colonel hurling insults at American tourists from his favorite corner of the Empress Bengal Room.

Tickets for the Smile Show opening next Saturday and its two-month run are now on sale at the McPherson box office.

Opera Held At Courtenay

An important part of the long established Courtenay Youth Music Camp is the opera and voice program, under the direction this year of Irving Guttman, internationally noted in the opera field.

Fifth week of the camp, Aug. 5-10, is to be devoted to opera performances which summarize the preceding weeks of training.

Mozart's Cosi Fan Tutte is to have a full production and Victoria Symphony's Laszlo Gati will be guest conductor.

Performances in Courtenay will be on Aug. 7 and 9 but Gati is finalizing plans to bring the production down to Victoria on Aug. 11 if suitable auditorium arrangements can be completed.

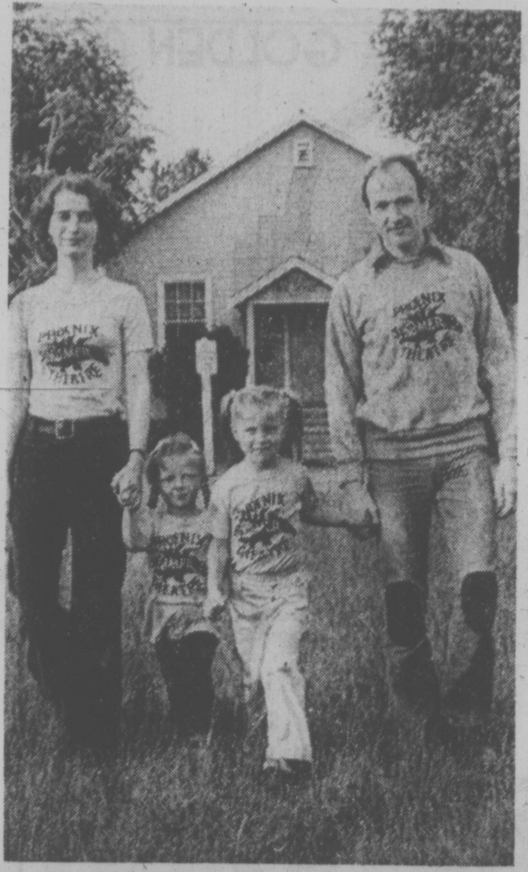
Pacific National Exhibition



AN OBSERVER could be forgiven for mistaking these four for members of a mixed-age ball team. But they actually are members — or related to members of the Phoenix Players, sporting new T shirts designed for the summer repertory company by theatre designer Bill West. From left they are Judy Pool, Lucinda-May Kinghorn, Nyree Kinghorn, and Anton Stratford.

GILBERT & SULLIVAN

This year of 1975 is the centenary of the brilliant and historic collaboration of W. S. Gilbert and Arthur Sullivan.

The gifted writer-satirist lyricist and the composer with the superb melodic talent scored their first success in 1875 with the one act operetta, Trial by Jury.

A celebration of the centenary will be part of Victoria Summer Festival when a new organization, the Four Seasons Musical Theatre Society, debuts at Newcombe Auditorium July 19.

The complete Trial by Jury will form one half of the first bill, balanced by excerpts from the longer operetta, Patience.

In the second program highlights from Iolanthe and The Mikado will be performed by the ensemble of six singers with instrumental accompaniment.

The programs will alternate through two mid-festival weeks ending Aug. 1. Performances will be daily except Sunday at 8:30 p.m.

They will immediately follow the symphonic concerts in Heritage Court, and will last approximately one hour.

Presentation will be semi-concert style with formalized customes and sets designed by Bastion Theatre designer John Heath. Execution of the sets is by Bernard Raffo.

Peter Mannering is doing the staging and musical direction is by Allan Magee.

The six singer-actors are John Heath, who has contributed several memorable characterizations to recent Victoria stage annals; Nan Long, soprano; Richard Margison, tenor; Ray Middleton, baritone, and Helen Middleton, mezzo.

Janie Woods Morris, who initiated the idea and spearheaded the whole project, is the sixth member of the cast. She will be remembered for an outstanding performance as Ladonza-Dulcinea in Victoria Operatic Society's notable Man of La Mancha.

The Gilbert and Sullivan programs are another free entertainment under the umbrella of the Victoria Summer Festival.

UVIC CONCERTS

Music of a special and inimate kind has for the last few years been a feature of July activity on the University of Victoria campus.

Under its UVic imprint of Summermusic, it returns for the sixth year with four pairs of concerts between July 8 and 31. The pairs will take place Tuesdays and Thursdays in the MacLaurin Auditorium at 8 p.m.

UVic conductor George Corwin has arranged this year's program and will conduct the concerts featuring the Summer Strings ensemble, on July 15-18 and 29-31.

Opening concerts on July 8-10, will present duo pianists Winifred Scott and Robin Wood in a program which will include the Brahms Variations on a theme by Haydn and music by Mozart, Bartok and Rachmaninoff.

The July 22-24 program will be given by Trio Victoria which consists of three of this city's most noted artists Robin Wood, Harry Cawood and James Hunter. A highlight of this concert will be Dvorak's F minor Trio. Cawood will also be the violin soloist at the final pair of concerts, being features in Vivaldi's The Seasons.

For the July 15-17 concerts, flutist Lanny Pollet will be heard in Bach's Suite No. 2 in B minor. Another work to be heard on this program is Grieg's melodically haunting Holberg Suite.

The MacLaurin Building auditorium has limited seating and in past summers many concert-goers have been turned away from sold out concerts.

Dr. Corwin suggests that it is advisable for those interested to book tickets in advance by calling the department of music, 477-6911, extension 499.

IN PARK

This Sunday will see the start of a summer series of park concerts at Beacon Hill's Cameron Pavilion.

The opening program, commencing at 2:30 p.m., will feature the Victoria Concert Orchestra under direction of James Fraser, well known city violinist and teacher. Fraser will conduct the 32-piece orchestra in marches, waltzes, overtures and selections from Broadway musicals.

Master of ceremonies will be Fraser McAlpine.

On July 6 the program will provide a musical variety show with organist Reginald Stone, singer Judy Temple, the Totem Tones Quartet and guitarist-vocalist Peter Chipman.

The concerts are sponsored by the City of Victoria in conjunction with the Victoria Musicians Association and Trust Fund of the Recording Industries.

Confused Priorities

Nothing is more clear consistent and predictable than people's reactions to the spending of public funds.

Privately people can spend their money on the wildest foolishness; grossly indulging themselves and their children by frittering it away on useless, unnecessary or effete objects.

But let so much as $1,000 of tax money be spent on a project with which they don't happen to be in sympathy and they tend to become hotly indignant.

The sports fan who would cheerfully spend a small fortune on tickets, conveyance, accommodation and celebrant libations to attend a Grey Cup or some other such event, is probably the same man who would hit the ceiling if confronted with half a mill on his taxes to pay for a fine arts complex.

It's his money he's spending on something he enjoys; and it's also his money that is proposed being spent on something he doesn't enjoy.

There's a mighty difference and most of us react in exactly the same way in related situations.

Take for example, the recent Victoria City Council decision to spend $1,500,000 on salvaging the old Crystal Garden and turning it into an aboretum. It was done without batting an eye because at the present time the city fathers have a hang-up on memories and are scrambling to rescue bits and pieces of our past.

But there are plenty of incensed people around who are wondering why, if that kind of money is available, nothing has been done to refurbish the mouldering Royal Theatre.

At least the toilets might be made respectably functional and the stage door and lighting hazards removed.

According to my information there will be a citizens' committee to go into fund-raising armed with an alluring prospectus depicting the arboretum-aviary-entertainment complex. The city plans to go all out in high-geared organization for the project.

But when the same property was (at the initial suggestion of Mayor Pollen) being promoted by the Pacific Coast Centre Foundation for the long-needed and still missing arts centre, were any helpful ideas or positive actions forthcoming at the official level? Not at all.

The enthusiastic promoters of the present plans were inert and voiceless, probably because many still harbor the dusty idea that the arts constitute a mere frill on the bottom of the civic gown.

The truth is that if they were to look around — if they were really to look with the will and desire to see and comprehend what the people of Victoria are doing and thinking, they might be amazed at what they would discover.

For the fact is that the number of Victorians — from toddlers to late middle years — who are involved to some degree with one or more of the arts has mushroomed beyond expectations of the most optimistic.

Reference is to the whole gamut — the popular arts as well as the more esoteric — for all are vital to a rich and satisfying way of life.

Victoria has become a hub for study practise and participation in the arts. It has "the finest conservatory of music west of Toronto" according to more than one Canadian authority; one of the eight or 10 best orchestras in Canada; one of the finest art galleries and is the seat of an outstanding university fine arts facility.

There is enormous activity in dance, theatre, the crafts; multiple small galleries and teaching studios. And it is all growing, expanding steadily year by year.

But civic thinking is certainly not keeping up with this activity which is giving such clear indication of the character and development direction of this city and its environs during the next decades.

In Saanich the first cuts mayor and council make affect the arts and the inter-municipal committee turns its back totally on such a vibrant and essential facility as Open Space.

All of which will leave no doubt in anyone's mind as to where I'd want my tax dollar spent if I had my druthers, and why — while the concept is appealing enough — for my money the million-dollar arbortum-cum-whatever should not be a priority project.

Mercury Level High

REGINA (CP) — A study by the Prairie Institute of Environmental Health has found that consumers of large quantities of fresh water fish, in particuliar native people in northern Saskatchewan, have a higher level of mercury in their blood than other Saskatchewan groups.

The study also found that new born babies whose mothers eat a great deal of fish have almost double the mercury levels of their mothers.

A Movie Review

By Nora Hutchison

JAWS

A Flashy Thriller

"My husband tells me you're in sharks," the anxious wife of a small town police chief says to a young ichthyologist who has come to the beach community of Amity, Long Island to investigate rumors that a man-eating shark is prowling their coastline. Her slip of the tongue is one of the few moments of comic relief in Jaws — an extraordinarily well-filmed saga of a pitched battle between men and a Great White Shark.

The screenplay has been based on Peter Benchley's best-selling horror story of a rogue shark that terrorizes a resort town. Benchley clearly had a movie in mind when he wrote his very pedestrian novel because it's really little more than an outline of a third-rate chiller. But the story has been fleshed out, sub-plots have been dropped, and the action has been tightened up considerably with the result that the novel has been transformed into first-cltss commercial entertainment. It's one of those rare instances where a bad book provides the basis for a really good movie.

Jaws is such a surprisingly good piece of "commercial" movie-making that its few deficiencies are hardly worth bothering about. If anything, the director might be accused by the more bloodthirsty members of the audience of having been too restrained because he seldom resorts to "gore" unless it has a definite purpose in the plot's development. The movie is as much a psychological thriller as anything else. For the first hour or so, we really have no idea what this almost surreal predator looks like, and the audience is primed, in true Hitchcockian fashion, to expect the worst. Like the townspeople, we only see the aftermath of the attacks, with the result that our anxiety builds in direct proportion to that of the characters on-screen. It's almost a relief when we finally come face to face with the adversary.

SPIELBERG

Jaws was directed by Steven Spielberg, Hollywood's newest whiz kid. This is only his second feature (The Sugerland Express, released last spring, was his first), but already he demonstrates a real feeling for the medium. He knows how to catch the audience's attention with curious bits of characterization and visual detail, and how to hold it with a superb sense of timing. And despite the fact that Jaws is basically an adventure-thriller — a movie format which by its nature leaves very little scope for the development of individual personalities — Spielberg takes the time to create a gallery of unusually interesting protagonists.

The story has three "heroes" — an Everyman character in the guise of the town's police chief whose terror of the water is only overcome by his sense of duty to the community; a "know-it-all" scientist — the sharp, self-possessed ichthyologist whose passion is sharks and who has the wound to show for it; and a grizzled, sardonic fisherman named Quint, whose fanatical urge to take on the shark, single-handedly if possible, overrides his experience and better judgment. In the hands of another director, these stock characters might never have grown beyond their scripted dimensions, but Spielberg infuses them with such feisty energy that we respond with wholehearted concern to their danger. They are the most "human" stock characters I've seen on the screen in some time.

Spielberg is very aware of the power of visual composition — it's a quality you could define as "movie sense". It's a pleasure to watch the way in which he uses the camera to heighten dramatic effects and to create moods — such technical assurance is a rarity in commercial film-making these days. Under his direction, the beach, which is a familiar environment for most of us, becomes alien territory. He creates a new point of view from which to photograph the hapless swimmers, and the effect is disquieting. We see them both above and below the water's surface, splashing about with great determination. Their legs kicking wildly are bait for the shark, but their faces bright with sunlight betray no fear.

Jaws is an exceptional piece of commercial film-making, a flashy, tough thriller that plays on our most basic and primitive fears. However, due to the nature of the subject matter, and to several sequences involving small boys, it's not recommended for children. For the rest, Jaws is the perfect horror movie to start off the summer season.

ROLLING STONE

Stones' Melange Shoddy

By DAVE MARSH

The departure of Mick Taylor stalled production of the album of new material the Rolling Stones had planned to release coincidentally with their summer tour. But marketing necessities must be met, so they have come up with Made in the Shade, 10 tracks from the four albums released on their own label.

Meanwhile, settlement of a lawsuit with ex-manager Allan Klein forced the Stones to give him four albums of previously unreleased material. Metamorphosis, 14 tracks recorded around the time of the 1969 classic, Beggars Banquet, is the first.

Unfortunately, neither record is up to the Stone's standards. Made in the Shade hasn't got a bad track on it, but it also has nothing new or unconventional. Several flipsides, notably a tough version of Chuck Berry's "Let It Rock," were passed over in favor of obvious hits and a pair of songs, "Dance Little Sister" and "Rip This Joint," which were radio favorites when originally relleased.

The album is too unfocused to stand as a fair reflection of what the group has accomplished in the '70s. The murky, ominous tone of their work from Sticky Fingers to Goat's Head Soup (which has seemed to sum up the decade) doesn't come throug, and the reversion to R and B of It's Only Rock and Roll is ignored. I miss the magic of such significant album tracks as "Moonlight Mile," "Soul Survivor" and "If You Really Want to Be My Friend." And I also wonder if there is a Stones buff without them.

Metamorphosis is simply shoddy. Much of this material should never have been released and, certainly, even the best of it should never have come to us without explanatory notes. All that is known is that Taylor appears on 12 tracks, the late Brian Jones on two. And facts would offer the only hope of solution for this riddle of an album, which is such a hodge-podge of styles that it sometimes resembles a classy Stones-influenced band (say, the Who) more than the real thing.

RICHARD
. . . great solo

ABKCO's sloppiness is exemplified by crediting Mick Jagger and Keith Richard with writing "I Don't Know Why" and "Don't Lie to Me," which were actually composed by Stevie Wonder (with three collaborators) and Chuck Berry, respectively. Yet, despite the carelessness of the package, Metamorphosis is still musically fascinating.

Several of the songs place strong emphasis on pop-style production, an eccentricity apparent in no other Stones album. The familiar "Out of Time," from Flowers, has a female chorus, falsetto male singing a la the Beach Boys, horns, strings and bells, for instance. "I'd Much Rather Be with the Boys" opens with an orchestra quote from the Beach Boys' "Don't Worry Baby."

Not that hard-rock is absent. Keith Richard plays one of his greatest Chuck Berry solos ever on "Don't Lie to Me," and the reworked "Heart of Stone" (more falsettos) is similarly charged. Many of the songs on Side Two present a modified "Brown Sugar"-"Little Queenie" approach that would not officially blossom until (apparently) several years after these tracks were made. "Memo from Turner," for instance, is presented here is substantially different form than on the Performance soundtrack; it is based on the riff from "Sympathy for the Devil."

Metamorphosis, then, offers a new look at the development of the Rolling Stones. It is only shame that the glimpse we are given lacks so much crucial detail.

Root Insulation Needed For Plants in Containers

GARDENING
jack beastall

Insulation of roots from both heat and cold is necessary when plants are grown in containers. This applies particularly to raised wooden planters and window boxes, wooden tubs, and even to the pots of house plants when put outdoors for the summer.

Pots are the easiest to handle. All that is needed is to submerge the pot into the soil up to the rim, and then remember to put water into the pot. Tubs, planters and window boxes are not so easily accommodated.

Balcony and patio gardeners soon discover that growing plants in containers requires a quite different approach to growing them in the open garden.

In the first place, the pots are in a limited quantity of soil. There is no free exchange of moisture, plant nutrients, or micro-organisms with a large area of adjacent soil, nor is there the mass to hold a reasonably even temperature despite changes at the surface.

Secondly, roots are limited to the size of the container and are unable to extend in search of moisture or nutrients. The sides of the container form an impenetrable barrier, and the roots follow this barrier searching for a place to escape.

This results in a large proportion of the live roots being in contact with the sides of the container with nothing but a piece of wood about one inch thick between them and outside conditions. Heat and cold passing through the wood can cause damage to these roots.

Plants in the open garden have their roots well below soil level and are protected by the mass of surrounding soil from rapid temperature changes on the surface.

In some parts of Canada the soil freezes for a considerable depth, but frequent temperature changes are prevented by applying insulation to the surface in the form of a mulch after the soil surface has frozen.

The deepest frost penetration I have recorded here has only been five inches on exposed tilled soil, which occurred when temperatures dropped to near minus 18 Celsius (near zero F.) after weeks of mild temperatures and heavy rain. While borderline plants suffered severe damage to top growth, root damage was minimal. During the same period all plants in tubs and planters were lost when the wet soil turned to a block of ice.

When plants are grown in containers, whether clay pots, plastic pots, raised planters, tubs or window boxes, the gardener has to recognize this difference in root protection and devise some means of providing adequate insulation.

Several balcony and patio gardeners have learned the benefits of lining containers with sheets of plastic film before filling with soil. This film holds moisture within the container, and provided it is never allowed to accumulate standing water to rot the roots, it can prove a benefit to the plants.

But the plastic film lining does not provide any form of insulation as so many believe. Both heat and cold can move freely through the plastic film in either direction.

At least one balcony gardener is experimenting with sponge rubber, or foam rubber, as a container lining. A one-inch thickness of this material would have definite insulating value as well as providing a reservoir for surplus moisture.

But the idea of a lining is no use when containers are already filled with established plants, at least not until the soil has to be replaced. Insulation on these containers will have to be applied to the outside, and the methods decided on will depend on type of container, readily available materials, tools on hand, and space for working.

Some balcony gardeners with initiative, time, tools and cash, will no doubt contrive elaborate and effective schemes, but others with limited time, cash and tools must settle for something simple.

At this point it is well to remember that insulation from heat is easier to provide than insulation from cold. Any baffle, such as a piece of 3-ply with air space between baffle and container, will prevent the penetration of heat.

But when it comes to low temperatures, cold air can become stagnant in the space between baffle and container and increase the cold penetration into the root area.

If we are going to the trouble of building a false front on the containers to keep out heat, it would be wise to go a step further and provide cold insulation as well. This can be done by filling the space between baffle and container with insulating material.

There is a wide choice of insulation material, some cheap and readily obtainable, some more expensive. Choice will probably be influenced by the appearance of the finished job.

The cheapest will be newspaper, loosely crushed so that dead air is trapped, or sheets of corrugated cardboard from discarded cartons.

Insulation batts and loose insulation fill, as used on buildings, comes next, with the paper backing placed against the container, or a sheet of plastic film when loose filler is used, to prevent the material soaking water from the container. Foam rubber is another product. All of these go between the container and the outside baffle.

For the baffle itself, sheets of 3-ply are possibly the easiest to use; these can be cut to any shape or size with a handsaw, and attached with a few nails.

Before attaching, strips of 1-by-1 or 2-by-1 are nailed to the container to provide the space. This is as far as we need to go for insulation from heat.

For insulation from heat and cold, the insulation material must be applied next, excepting in the case of crumpled newspapaer (or similar materials) which is stuffed into the space after the baffle is attached.

Round plant tubs are looked upon as a problem. Balcony and patio gardeners have spent many hours of trying to figure a way to produce a round baffle.

A simple solution is to nail four 1-by-2 strips equidistant around the tub, then apply 3-ply sheets to form a square. Insulation is then stuffed into the four corners between tub and baffle.

When oly a heat baffle is used, the space between container and baffle must be left open at the top, and the baffle must be at least one inch above floor level to allow air to enter.

When insulating for heat and cold, the baffle extends to the floor, and the upper space is covered with 3-ply to prevent water soaking into the insulating material. If the insolution gets wet it will freeze in a low temperature and the container will be wrapped in a block of ice.

These are a few ideas that have been suggested, and used successfully, under specific conditions. Your conditions may be different, but the ideas could trigger a solution.

Since balcony and patio gardens have become popular we have not had a severe winter, and losses among container-grown plants have been slight. But that is no guarantee of what might come.

It is practically impossible to do any thorough job of protecting in freezing temperatures, ice-cold winds and flying snow. Better to do it now in warm weather and prevent the loss of precious plants which have taken several years to reach their present state.

The balcony gardener, like the soil-level gardener, has to be prepared for any contingency. The main difference is that the soil-level gardener usually has space for storing scrap materials to use in an emergency, whereas the balcony gardener lacks storage space, therefore must prepare in advance.

WORK FOR WEEK

If bearded German irises need division to renew plentiful flowering, lift them now, divide and replant the newest rhizomes at once.

After early weigelas and philadelphuses (Mock-orange) have finished most of their blooming, cut off the flowered portions just above where new growths can be seen. Soak well at the roots.

Deutzias and the Kolkwitzia have only the oldest flowered growths removed, even to ground level to shape or control the shrubs.

Asparagus cutting ceases, so that enough shoots are left to feed the roots in order to produce the edible stems next year. If seedling plants are being grown, watch for berrying later; discard those which produce berries for they will never give the best shoots.

She's Quietly Enthusiastic Over Women's Status Gain

elizabeth forbes

Norrie Preston, Victoria's Status of Women Action Group president, has returned from the annual meeting of the federal Advisory Council on the Status of Women, in Ottawa, quietly enthusiastic over work accomplished by the council in the two years of its existence, and the issues being studied at present.

One of four women recently appointed to fill council vacancies (others are from Edmonton, Regina and Saskatoon) she joins Vancouver's Joan Wallace as the second member from B.C.

Marriage, rape and family planning were main issues during the meeting, she reports, "and basic precepts, guidelines and jumping-off points were agreed on from which further research and recommendations to government can be made."

A paper recommending fundamental changes in the law respecting rape and other sexual offences, urged the elimination of the use of the word rape with "its archaic connotations of damage to property."

Property, in this instance, means a father's or a husband's property, Norrie Preston points out "and if it can be proved that damage to that property was done before the offence represented, then the case can be thrown out."

In addition, the committee studying the question of rape stated it was reluctant to recommend that all hearings or trials of sexual offences be held in camera (as proposed by some council members) but agreed that judges should be encouraged to use their discretion to bar the public from trials or parts of trials, in instances in which this is necessary to spare the victim's embarrassment.

Principles of equality and shared responsibility, highlighted a statement on the rights and responsibilities of spouses to each other in marriage.

"This included the recognition of unpaid work within the family as being as vital as paid work outside the family."

It was also accepted by members, including the two from British Columbia that "although a technique for ensuring economic equality during the currency of the marriage has not yet fully evolved, this must not prevent immediate reform to grant equality to men and women at the dissolution of the marriage, or the division of security in the form of pensions and tax free saving during the marriage."

A name change—birth planning for family planning and birth and conception control—was agreed upon.

This, Mrs. Preston explained "as being less offensive to teenagers and unmarried people in their attempts to obtain birth control information."

The 30-member Council, appointed from all parts of Canada, was appalled "by the refusal of the CBC to permit use of birth planning information" and a recommendation urged the national broadcasting company to reconsider its position.

The federal government will also be asked by Council to subsidize and assess information programs and set up federal - provincial mechanisms for the distribution of birth planning information.

A strong recommendation was made to government too, in response to the situation of the reported July eviction of non-status Indian women on the Caougnawaga reserve.

Here ACSW reiterated its stand that women and children should not be evicted while discussions on revisions to the Indian Act are proceeding between the federal government and the National Indian Brotherhood.

"It was also repeated that discrimination solely on the ground of sex should be dealt with separately and rapidly."

Plight of pregnant flight attendants prompted Council to agree that Labor Minister John Munro be asked to make a public statement in support of the Canadian Labor Code provision that prohibits dismissal of pregnant employees.

Reminders to employers of the law and a warning to CP Air to comply with the law, were further recommendations.

Discussion took place during the meeting on the lack of public knowledge across Canada as to the work and accomplishments of Council and the responsible advisory role it plays in connection with the federal government.

There was a distinct feeling, the Victoria member says, that the ACSW public image could be more effectively enhanced if more women knew of its existence and were aware of the issues it scrutinizes.

In this connection, Council head, Dr. Katie Cooke, remarked that women in general "must start assuming their social responsibilities of pressuring for change . . . for it is only when pressure is put on government that it acts."

Next meeting of the ACSW will be held in Halifax in October.

Until then, Norrie Preston as one of a committee on family and children's law, will be studying, gathering and preparing material for a paper on that subject to be presented at the meeting.

"It's an issue I am very interested in," she says, "and in which I hope I will be able to make a worthwhile contribution."

SMOKING, LIKE SEX REQUIRES PRIVACY

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (UPI) — A psychiatrist says smoking should be treated like sex — something to be done in private.

Donald Banzhaf made the comparison at a Monroe County legislature meeting. He was one of 10 persons who urged the lawmakers to pass a law banning smoking in public places.

"Smoking is something that should be done in private and then only between consenting adults," he told the legislators.

He said smokers should not be told they can't smoke in the privacy of their own homes, but "they should not bother other people by it. We've had enough pulmonary rape."

Live-Aboards' Budget Sprang Some Leaks

TORONTO (CP) — If John Dyer's landlord cuts his water off, he's really in trouble. Dyer lives on a boat in Toronto harbor all year.

He's not alone. At least a dozen other Toronto people including New Democratic Party leadership candidate John Harney, a United Church minister, an architect and an RCMP constable do too.

John Dyer and his wife, Pat, both 28, didn't know a thing about boats 14 months ago — except that they wanted one. Badly. But they could not afford to keep their 10-room house and have a boat too.

So they sold their house and moved into a dilapidated, 35-foot, double-ended wooden cutter.

John thought they'd save money by living aboard — and it looked good on paper.

Total monthly expenses, for the house averaged $430 including mortgage, taxes, repairs, hydro, water and heating. Living on the boat cost $221 a month for mortgage, mooring, hydro, water and maintenance. An unexpected paint job cost $1,000.

Then came the hidden expenses. Confinement started to get to them, so they spent a fortune on dining out — at least three times a week — and movies.

But the Dyers are confirmed romantics and they are not about to give up.

"Whether or not I ever do take off to the Bahamas is immaterial, as long as I know I can," Dyer says.

John Harney's experience is a different story. He knows boats. He has been around them all his life.

Harney says that his boat, a 48-foot Nova Scotia fishing boat, is "pretty darn snug." He loves the feeling of sitting near his wood stove when a storm blows up.

He also enjoys the feeling of community he has experienced with five other boats nearby.

Harney's next-door neighbor is a fellow faculty member at York University, United Church minister Ed File. File took to his boat two years ago when his marriage broke up and his wife kept the house.

He rotates between his 42-foot schooner and a farm just outside Toronto which he shares with friends.

"Living on a boat is a dream to lots of my friends. But the dream is about fair weather. No one envies you being up in the middle of the night pushing off ice flows that are banging into your boat," File says.

New Plastic Bottle

WASHINGTON, (UPI) There's a new plastic bottle coming on the market for soft drinks and maybe for beer. The U.S. Food and Drug Administration says it's safe. Some environmentalists question that, and object to its litter potential besides.

At least one phase of the dispute is headed for court.

Four firms are setting up production of the bottle, made of a material called acrylonitrile. The Monsanto Chemical Company already is supplying it to Coca-Cola, which has started test marketing it, and plans to extend its use.

FDA officials said tests by Monsanto indicate there is no danger of chemicals from the bottle "migrating" to the liquid inside, and thus there is no health hazard.

But the Environmental Action Foundation and the Environmental Defence Fund said there is inadequate proof of safety. They also claim that production of the bottles uses more energy than that of glass returnable bottles; that they contribute to air and water pollution and in the manufacturing process they could give off dangerous fumes if burned in a confined area and that users will scatter them around the countryside.

'Too Old' To Travel Father Says Sadly

BOMBAY (CP) — "I have not seen my son for seven years," says Swaminatha Ayyar, a retired government official. "And I'm too old to travel to Canada to see him."

A widower, Ayyar lives alone in his two-room house in Borivli, a suburb of Bombay.

"I'm not sorry I spent most of my savings to send my son to England, then to Canada, for higher studies," he says. "But we are so far apart that we can't even meet once in five years."

Mrs. Madhuben Shah is a rich widow. Two of her four sons are living in the United States. Her only daughter is married to an Indian working in Britain.

There is a family reunion in the Shah home on aristocratic Malabar Hill every two or three years. But Mrs. Shah would like all her children to come home.

Among the saddest Indians these days are those whose sons and daughters have migrated to foreign countries. They say their lives are empty. At the same time, most of them have declined invitations to join their children abroad and spend their last years with them.

"How can I think of settling down in Canada or the United States?" asks Balbir Singh, a 69-year-old Sikh whose four sons are living abroad. "I just cannot adapt myself to foreign ways. I'm no longer young."

Singh's eldest son works in Toronto. Two years ago, Singh made a trip to Canada and the United States but came back within six weeks.

As Singh put it: "There is much to like in those countries but not for a man like me. I am too much of an Indian, with roots in my home state of Punjab."

One Hindu housewife recently went to California to meet her daughter. She found the climate excellent but the food "tasteless."

"Being a staunch vegetarian, I could not eat meat dishes," said Mrs. Jyotsna Hazari. "America is all right for a month or two and then one gets tired of the hectic life, the strange food and the absence of the familiar surroundings."

Mrs. Hazari, 67, hopes that eventually her daughter and son-in-law, also from Bombay, will return to India.

Many Indian parents say they do not wish to send their sons to Western countries for higher education because of the fear of "losing" them.

WHOLE WHEAT ROLLS

By MARY MOORE

It is over six years since I gave the recipe for making 12 whole wheat rolls and one loaf of whole-wheat bread.

This recipe was popular because it was an easy amount for amateurs to handle and of course was economical. It does not call for eggs. There is a change in the flour amounts.

Since bread and rolls prices have doubled, more and more cooks are baking their own and every day letters arrive asking for more and more yeast products.

Some busy housewives will welcome today's because it is done in two stages. (Of course it can be done in one continuous process if you wish.) You make the dough and refrigerate it overnight and do the kneading, shaping and baking in the morning. Let's go.

TWELVE WHOLE WHEAT ROLLS AND ONE LOAF

1 tbsp. granular yeast
½ cup lukewarm water
1 tbsp. brown sugar (first amount)
2 cup scalded milk
2 tbsp. brown sugar (second amount)
2 tbsp. shortening
1 tsp. salt
3 cups stirred whole wheat flour
2¾ cup stirred white flour (approximately)
½ cup wheat germ.

In large bowl soak the yeast with tht 1 tablespoon brown sugar in the lukewarm water 10 minutes. To the scalded milk add the 2 tablespoons brown sugar, shortening and salt and stir to dissolve and cool to lukewarm. Add to risen yeast liquid. Add the whole wheat flour and wheat germ and beat for 5 minutes. Add 2 cups of the white flour and beat and mix as well as you can. (Reserve leftover ¾ cup for flouring kneading board later.) Cover well and refrigerate overnight (OR over and let rise until doubles at room temperature).

In the morning warm dough up to room temperature on counter and if it has not doubled overnight let it rise until doubled. Turn dough out on board floured with remaining ¾ cup and knead 200 times. Cut in half.

Shape one half into a loaf and put in buttered 8½ x 4½ x 2½'' loaf pan (smaller than standard). Shape remaining half into an 18'' roll and cut into twelve even pieces. Shape and pat into 3-inch rounds. Fold over to form Porterhouse (pocketbook) rolls. Place at least 2 inches apart on greased cookie sheets.

Let rolls rise until doubled. Let bread rise until 1 inch above rim of pan—about 1¾ hours. Bake at 375 deg. Fahr. Rolls require 15 minutes; loaf 30 to 35 minutes.

Of course the sooner these yeast products are eaten the better. Try to time it so the rolls come out of the oven just as you are calling your crowd for dinner.

Happy bread baking!

Rock Crab, Snails New Delicacies

HALIFAX (CP) — The rock crabs and sea snails, or whelk, found along Nova Scotia's shores may become profitable delicacies thanks to modern technology.

Michael A. Drebot, development officer for the Nova Scotia department of fisheries, said the two species have been underutilized and have not caught the attention of the market.

"The sea snail has been associated with toughness, but with research and modern technology we have made it a tasty, tender and palatable product, comparable to French escargot."

The rock crab was a different problem. Until now this cousin of the red queen Atlantic crab has been difficult for processors to shell, requiring manual labor at a high cost. This has been changed by mechanical de-boners which extract the meat from the shell under pressure.

Hotel, motel and restaurant operators were invited recently to see and taste the two new delicacies.

"We feel we can offer the restaurant trade these products at prices favorable to similar ones now on the market," said Odette David of the consumer science division of Environment Canada, who supervised the demonstration.

Doing the Town

With DOROTHY FRASER

A rose is a rose is a rose . . .

Roses are at their peak right now . . . and we doubt whether Island Florist have ever had more beautiful ones! . . . All locally grown, there's a tremendous variety . . . everything from those tiny Sweetheart roses which stand up so well, making them particularly lovely for sick rooms . . . to the gorgeous "Forever Yours", which are a deep, luscious, velvety red . . . We learned from Mrs. FitzSimmons that the secret of making roses last is to crush the bottoms of the stems . . . or better still, to give each stem a long slash with a sharp knife . . . and ALWAYS put them in warm water . . . We think this advice is worth its weight in roses! . . . While on this subject of slicing, Island Florist have just got a shipment of beautiful little knives ideal for slicing flower stems . . . New, too, are some very nice window box planters in a plastic called fronzewood . . . the kind of little planters a lot of people have been asking for, we hear . . . About 14" x 5" . . . they're just right for sitting on a window ledge . . . either inside or out . . . Would look delightful planted with African violets, or those little tropical plants which everyone is so crazy about these days! . . . Island Florist, 745 Fort St., 385-3113.

This year a flat, bare sandal goes with everything for day.

A little bit of Cymru . . . (Wales to you!) . . .

The most intriguing things come out of Wales . . . And if you'd like to see some of these without stirring further away than Nootka Court, go visit the Welsh Hand Loom . . . that delightful Welsh shop where everything is completely authentic . . . We won't even mention the pure wool tapestry clothes this time, but tell you about the charming pieces of hand-made Welsh Portmadoc pottery . . . beautiful intense colours with a high glaze . . . This week we saw some new mugs and ashtrays with the Celtic cross in relief . . . an impressive flat black platter with a red enamel Welsh dragon . . . Speaking of dragons, there are some very smart hand-woven neckties with a single small red dragon design . . . and if you'd like to own a Welsh flag, Welsh Hand Loom has just received some . . . Green and white centred with a big red dragon . . . These Welsh flags are pretty hard to come by so don't procrastinate if you'd like one . . . We almost forgot to tell you about the lovely blue and green flagon with the red dragon on it . . . Know what a flagon is? Well, go see for yourself! . . . For doll collectors there are beautiful dolls in traditional Welsh dress . . . in sizes from 8" to 24". The large doll has a Swiss musical movement and plays "Land of My Fathers" . . . Welsh Hand Loom, Nootka Court, 634 Humboldt St., 384-7723.

Some exclusive models at Charmante's . . .

Visited Charmantes last Monday and was rewarded with the sight of a very sophisticated "Mexican wedding dress" with the St. Gillian label . . . It's a 3-pce. gown in cream embroidered polyester voile . . . a loose jacket with drop shoulder, nylon jersey tank top edged with lace, and skirt buttoned down the front . . . A one-of-a-kind size 12 . . . There's an evening pant suit in the same embroidered polyester voile, and linen-finish pants . . . very pretty . . . and a St. Gillian cotton and polyester lounge dress . . . also one of a kind . . . with multi-colored stripes of various widths and lacing in front . . . This would be perfect for patio wear . . . just the dress for a size 8 woman who wants to look a little different! . . . We were very much impressed with some long polyester dresses with an unusual design of vari-colored dots . . . Divinely simple, they have round neckline and long sleeves . . . finished with three rows of stitching . . . We're told these dresses look smashing with a body inside them . . . Anyway they're very suitable for dinner or any other occasion when a covered-up long dress is called for . . . Predominating shades of blue or rose . . . Charmante's, Hillside Shopping Centre, 595-1555.

Bienvenidos or Aloha? . . .

This week we'd like to give you some practical advice relayed to us by Paulin's . . . What it all boils down to is that if you're toying with the idea of a holiday in Hawaii or Mexico around Christmas time . . . in fact at any time next winter . . . you should be considering making enquiries now . . . Paulin's don't yet have the exact details of their winter package tours, but they have a pretty good idea and can be of the greatest help to you . . . Get started with preliminary enquiries because often by the time brochures are available, it's too late for reservations . . . We personally love both Mexico and Hawaii, and wouldn't know which to recommend first . . . Puerto Vallarta, Mazatlan, Guadalajara, Mexico City . . . all delightful for a holiday sojourn . . . And whenever we see the "Happiness is Hawaii" slogan, we silently nod in agreement . . . For sea and sun . . . excitement or dolce far niente . . . take your pick of foreign-flavored Mexico . . . or mingle with those delightful Hawaiians . . . Take the new hydrofoil tour around the outer islands! But start doing something about it soon! . . . Call in and talk to the travel experts at Paulin's . . . Have them get your reservations in . . . Or, if you're allergic to package tours, they'll make individual arrangements for you . . . Paulin Travel, 1006 Government St., 382-9168.

Viyella gowns for every woman . . .

Those of you who've been waiting for all the new Viyella dressing gowns to arrive at Wilson's . . . the time is now! . . . Besides those we told you about a couple of weeks ago, there are now two other styles . . . One which buttons down the front, fastens at the neck with satin ties . . . And the classic wraparounds . . . so easy to slip on first thing in the morning . . . and putter around in . . . LOT OF KIDDING ABOUT NEW JOBS

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont. (CP) — Linda Harju and Marg Quick take a lot of kidding about their new jobs.

The two women who work in the strip division of the Algoma Steel Corp. Ltd., are hookers in the 46-inch plate-finishing mill.

They are not the type usually associated with this word but rather operators of the hooking equipment which loads bundles of steel plate for shipment.

Mrs. Harju and Mrs. Quick are two of 30 women recently hired by the steel company for laboring jobs.

"Everything is going great," Harju said. "We are carrying our load the same as the guys.

"It's interesting. I'm enjoying it," said Quick, "but it's not the job or place for women who don't like to get dirty."

Jack Ostroski, president of Local 2251 United Steelworkers of America, said: "I don't think there's any job in the plant women cannot do unless by choice. There's no reason they can't operate cranes. They did it during the war."

Like all new workers, the women have applied for membership in the union.

Ostroski said there are already 30 to 40 women in his local. Some are holdovers from the Second World War while others work in the electrical repair shops, janitorial service and environmental control.

"We have no restrictions in our bargaining agreement. The word 'employee' is used and male or female is interchangeable in all our welfare and benefits, in everything as is the word "spouse."

The Wonderful World of Animals

By DR. FRANK MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: I've already been told I can have the best of show puppy out of this litter just born for $350. I'm willing to pay that, but I'm wondering whether I should rely on the breeder to pick out the best puppy or try to do it myself. I've read a lot about the breed and figure I know something about it now. I can get the puppy any time between six and eight weeks. What would be best?

—J.F.

DEAR J.F.: The safest bet is to delay as long as possible any such choice. Regardless of the expertise involved (and the breeder should be the better judge in this case), there is no sure way to pick the best in the litter at such a tender age.

Actually, it's often difficult to determine the best of litter until a year of age. Fortunately, an expert can come reasonably close to judging future prospects, at least in regard to proper proportions, at about three and a half months of age.

If a show prospect is your main concern, then that's a preferable puppy-picking age and the breeder should be willing to keep the pups that long. Note that that is NOT the best age for picking the most pettable puppy. Then the ideal age would be seven or eight weeks. This age is likely to produce the best bonding between pup and person.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Dad was really mad when he found Frieda froze in the freezer. He thought she was a carton of ice cream. Then Mom got mad because she thought I was cruel to Frieda. What happened was, I accidentally stepped on Frieda and broke her back after she jumped out of her tank. I couldn't save her, but didn't want her to suffer, so I put her in the ice cream carton and put her in the freezer (she'd been in there a week when Dad found her). I didn't know of a better way to put her to sleep.

DEAR P.T., Jr.: Actually, when euthanasia is unavoidable freezing is not cruel for coldblooded species. As their temperature drops they become inactive, go into a deep sleep, and succumb peacefully at around 20 degrees Fahrenheit. Ice cream eaters and others should have been warned ahead of time, however; and there was no reason to keep Frieda in the freezer after sh'd died.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Even though I've cut way back on her food, Dimples, my cat, hasn't lost any of that weight she put on last winter. Since she's inside she doesn't get any exercise, and she's crabby as the devil on this diet. Now what?

—T.A.

DEAR T.A.: Her doctor should check her out first to be sure she's physically fit otherwise. Then he can prescribe a presumably more effective, lower calorie diet. Most cats can be encouraged to play if you're persistent enough. Your frustrated feline can (and probably will) take out her vertical exercise, a cat tree or a series of ascending short shelves along the wall which she can climb. Whatever the apparatus, many semi-confined cats will exercise more if a playmate (person) and optional facilities are available.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Duchess, our Irish setter, is due soon. My young child, fascinated by the whole process, wonders why the puppies wiggle so much. She wonders also if they can hear her.

—G.M.

DEAR G.M.: One of the primary causes for activity in the soon-to-be-born is the understandable desire to find a comfortable position. As is the case with near-term Homo sapiens, young puppies can indeed hear, particularly sharp noises or percussion sounds. It's just possible your daughter's voice, properly modulated, might be soothing to them.

DEAR DR. MILLER: Is there any simple remedy for the slimes in Paradise fish?

—W.V.

DEAR W.V.: A thin, gray, slimy layer on Paradise fish is often caused by microscopic-sized parasites which are susceptible to salt. If this is the problem, then a 20-minute bath in a 2 per cent salt solution (plain, not iodized salt) will usually kill these organisms. The "bath" should be repeated in 48 hours to eliminate previously encysted organisms.

dear abby

Louder, Please

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I love to travel. I've been in 48 states, Mexico, Canada and the Holy Land. I especially like to travel by bus so I can get a close look at the scenery, but I've reached the point where I would almost rather stay home than get stuck sitting next to some of the folks I've come across on my trips.

Invariably, my seat partner wants to get acquainted in a hurry, so he (or she) starts to tell me his life history. Then out comes the snnapshots of the whole family. Some even tell me personal things about their lives, which are of no interest to me. These confessions take hours, and since I will never see these people again, a whole segment of my vacation has been wasted. Usually the bus is full, and I can't move to another seat.

I have tried to escape from these nonstop talkers by burying my nose in a book or pretending to "nap" — but then I'm depriving myself of the scenery. I wish I had the courage to say, "Please shut up — you are boring me!" But I am basictlly a nice person (or coward) and can't do that.

So, Dear Abby, what should I do? — LIKES PEACE AND QUIET.

DEAR LIKES: Turn to your seat partner at the beginning of the trip and say, "I hope you're not expecting conversation, because I am hard of hearing. Unless he (or she) knows sign language, you're home free.

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I are Mormons who abstain from the use of tobacco, alcohol, coffee and tea.

I am planning a party for my mother, who is visiting me from out of town, and I don't want to serve the abovementioned items. I also don't wish to provide for smokers, even though many of my friends, including my mother, are not Mormon.

My mother says it would be a terrible faux pas for me not to serve tea or coffee. She even offered to serve it herself and buy it if it would relieve me of the responsibility of seeming to approve of it by having it in my home. I told her I felt that I would be compromising my beliefs.

My question: Is she correct? Or am I? — PUZZLED.

DEAR PUZZLED: I am informed that the Church of the Latter Day Saints leaves it up to the individual. The church has no ruling. With so many fine coffee substitutes available, you could surely serve one.

DEAR ABBY: Help! How does a terrible housekeeper learn to keep a reasonably neat house? Don't tell me to force myself to do my housework before my pleasurable jobs. I sew a lot and do things with my children (like coloring, playing games and working puzzles), but I find myself letting my housework go.

The kids always have clean clothes and good meals, but my house is a wreck! There must be a smooth routine or method in a book somewhere, but I'm too ashamed to ask for it — after 10 years of marriage. HOPELESS.

DEAR HOPELESS: Nobody's hopeless. First, teach your children to hang up their clothes (when they're old enough) and put away their toys before going to bed. Don't eat (or let anyone else eat) anywhere but in the kitchen or dining room. Don't let the children undress anywhere except in their bedroom. (This goes for shoes, too.)

After breakfast, wash the dishes immediately, so they won't stack up.

Don't ever set anything down. Put it where it belongs!

Give one room a thorough cleaning every day, and dust and sweep the other rooms.

And if you house isn't always a model for "House Beautiful," don't worry. Doing things with your kids pays bigger dividends than being the neatest housekeeper on the block.

Welch Medical Report

By DR. WILLIAM J. WELCH

(Dr. Welch is a practicing physician and an associate professor of clinical medicine.)

In a world in which so many youngsters seem unable to resist taking drugs to get "high," and so few parents can be wholly confident that their own youngsters are immune to the temptation, rock musicians who extoll cocaine as "the highest high of all" are among the most degraded of all the miserable Pied Pipers of our century.

Jocular and seductive, they sing of "cocaine running around my brain" as though this compulsive hyperstimulation of cocaine is somehow a prestigious experience, hardly more than desirable high spirits.

There is, moreover, a falsely reassuring notion among cocaine enthusiasts that the drug is not addicitive. Technically speaking, it is true that tolerance — having to raise the dose with continued use to get the desired effect — does not occur and withdrawal symptoms are few if the user is deprived of the drug.

But the craving to repeat the experience of elation induced by the drug is so strong in the susceptible that a state of chronic compulsive need results, which is as bad as technical addiction.

The first known use of cocaine is recorded in the land of the Incas, high in the Andes mountains in South America, 3,000 years ago.

When the Spanish conquerors discovered that chewing coca leaves made docile workers of the poverty stricken highland Indians, they provided it as part of their daily wages.

The present-day natives of the Andes highlands consume nearly 20 million pounds of coca leaves each year. Already half-starved, apparently only when half-drugged can they bear their inhuman workloads in the cold, thin mountain air. And they require to chew their numbing drug constantly.

This is because the state of elation that rushes up when cocaine is injected or inhaled lasts only a few minutes. Heavy users who are intent on maintaining their "high" have been known to reinject cocaine into their veins as often as every 10 minutes.

When cocaine is used repeatedly and then discontinued, the once "high" user may be overwhelmed by feelings of depression. This leads to inhaling or injecting more cocaine to "cure" the depression. The "cure" is, of course, only temporary and only serves to establish a self-perpetuating habit.

The reality behind the "high" is very different from the subtle implication of the rock songs that to be "high" is just to have a good time. Compulsive dependence on such stimulation, instead of a good time, brings in its train the whole panorama of deterioration that characterizes any self-destructive habit.

There does not seem to be any official way of silencing the modern Pied Pipers. The "rock scene," ushered in by the rollicking boyishness of the Beatles, has been tolerated as if it were the symbol of the freedom and innocence and gaiety of the untrammeled young. It is time we took a closer look at not-so-innocent elements, which have worked their way into the world of rock.

Drum scoops up oil-polluted water

By PAT DUFOUR
Times Staff

Top-flight Environment Canada officials in Ottawa are enthusiastic over a Victoria man's invention that promises to be a major breakthrough in coping with major oil spills at sea.

Designed by Capt. James Steele of 2775 Tudor, it's a catamaran-type barge that can be pushed by tug at 15 knots to the scene of a disaster.

To date, it's the only oil pickup vessel that can operate in rough seas.

Built by Lega Fabricating Co. in Vancouver, the 40-foot barge was launched May 19.

Steele, a master mariner and engineer who heads the marine consultant firm of James Steel and Company Ltd., explained that, unlike any conventional vessel, he designed the barge — Pacific Enterprise — using only straight lines. This cuts out the need for a shipyard. Lega's usual line of steel goods is ladders, walkways and other smaller items.

Dr. Sy Ross, chief of the environmental engineering division in Ottawa, was one of those that watched her go through her paces Wednesday in Burrard Inlet.

"We've got to build one," was his response after he saw the barge scoop up oil-polluted water at the rate of 105 tons an hour, her reciprocal-moving drums moving at 60 revolutions a minute.

Steele has spent eight years — on and off — designing the vessel, he and Gulf of Georgia Towing spending $175,000 on the project.

Clean Seas general manager, Capt. Desmond Sjoquist was with Steele last week when he tested out the barge in rough seas off Point Grey.

"There was a good moderate chop," Steele reported, "She was steady as a rock. We turned her beam on (to the waves) just for the hell of it. It didn't make the slightest difference."

Steele said he persisted with his project because, in spite of political pressure from Canada, we are powerless to stop the United States establishing an oil tanker route from Alaska to the Washington side of the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

"All the other oil-fighting devices work only in harbours. They's be useless off Neah Bay or Pachena Point," he observed.

The Pacific Enterprise was limited to 40 feet because only private funds — his and Gulf of Georgia's — went into her but Steele said a 300-foot model would be capable of storing 5,000 tons of oil in her tanks.

The Pacific Enterprise has four tanks, two in each of her twin hulls. Borrowing the submarine Kingston valve concept, Steele, designed each tank with such a valve.

When the valves are opened, the tanks fill up with clear water. Once the mopping-up operation began, the oil-polluted water is pumped in, clean water is let out at the same fast speed until gradually the tanks are filled with only oil.

Conventional cleanup devices, up until now, work on the principle of separating oil from water. Steele said this took too much time because the two substances are not easily separated.

"Speed is essential when you're fighting a massive oil spill," Steele warned.

What indicates when the tanks are full of oil?

Steele explained an indicator made of parawax tells exactly to what level the tanks have been filled with oil.

"Because of its specific gravity parawax floats in water and not in oil," Steele said, "It's really beautifully simple."

To make her easy to be pushed by a tug, the barge has a notch in which the tug's bow is nudged, kept securely in place by a wire bridle that extends to the port and starboard sides of the barge's 26-foot beam.

Apart from the ease in which she can be pushed, Steele said the barge was so designed so she would be the first to enter polluted seas, not the tug.

Steele calls his invention OSCAR (Oil Spill Containment And Recovery).

Let OSCAR do it could well be the answer to oil spills at sea, which Steele and others see as inevitable.

California Sues Oil Firms

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A multi-million-dollar antitrust suit has been filed by California against 11 major U.S. oil firms, charging them with unlawful conspiracy to restrai ntrade in the production, pricing and mtrketing of oil products.

The complaint, filed on behalf of the state, asks for unspecified damages and an injunction to bar the companies from continuing the alleged violations.

The defendants are Atlantic Richfield Co., Continental Douglas Oil Co., Standard Oil of California, Exxon Co. of U.S.A., Getty Oil Co., Gulf Oil Co., Mobil Oil Co., Texaco Inc., Phillips Oil Co., Union Oil Co. and Shell Oil Co.

All religions have had a beginning and an ending. Even the modern religions of the day will have an ending whether or not anyone believes it. But with the ECK it is vastlyl different. No one can establish any beginning of It with a founder of such, for ECK cannot be placed within the framework of matter, energy, time and space, for It is the creation of all these elements. It is Life Itself. It just IS, and there is nothing else man nor even Soul can say about It.

Better Way Sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ron Nessen, White House press secretary, says he and his press-office staff will spend the weekend at Camp David working on ways to improve White House press briefings.

Nessen made the statement after a briefing during which he criticized un-named newsmen for "blind, mindless, irrational suspicion and cynicism and distrust" and threatened to discontinue his daily news briefings in their present form.

Spokesman For 'Nature' Retires

By HUMPHRY DAVY

DR. SZCZAWINSKI

British Columbia faces many problems in the future and should continue to build its "brain bank" to prevent costly and irreparable mistakes, says Dr. Adam Szczawinski, curator of botany for the Provincial Museum.

While many bright young men have been taken on by the government in the past few years, the province is still short of top-notch scientists and experts to ensure B.C. resources are used properly, he said.

"When I say experts, I don't mean pseudo experts," said the 61-year-old botanist, who announced he was retiring at the end of July after 20 years service with the government.

Szczawinski, one of B.C.'s leading conservationists who helped preserve many beautiful areas in the province from degradation, fought for better planned cities and against wasteful land practices, said he was retiring strictly for personal reasons.

"I have enjoyed my work," he said, "but now I want to move into other fields. I will be able to devote more time to conservation without the burden of administrative duties. Besides I want to enjoy nature when there's time."

Looking back at the province's expansion over the past 20 years, he observed there are still many people who think B.C. is a pioneering province and a land of plenty.

"They are dreaming," he said. "It was a land of plenty when there were a few thousands people here, but not with two million, plus hundreds of thousands more to come."

"The greater the population, the less you have and the more the problems," he noted.

But he explained by this he did not mean there should be no growth.

"There is still lots of room in B.C. for people," he said. "But growth should be controlled carefully. I believe in controlled growth. It is necessary if we are to prevent serious social problems and waste of our resources."

Szczawinski who started to fight in the fifties for green belts and parks in the Greater Victoria area, said people today are aware of the need for green areas free of pollution.

"'I think they see it is necessary for their health and for their very survival," he added.

He pointed out the alternative is "urban jungles," which many U.S. cities have become.

"The fathers of some of these U.S. cities gave little thought to planning and to setting aside green areas for the future," he pointed out. "Today it is too late .We can avoid making these mistakes."

But the subject nearest to the botanist's heart is "nature" which he has seen dispoiled and slaughtered in many parts of the province.

"British Columbians have been pretty destructive," he said. "I hope they now realize that they are dependent on nature and without nature can not survive."

Of Polish birth Szczawinski has had some hair raising experiences and adventures. He graduated from the University of Lwow with a master's degree in 1937 and stayed on to lecture in botany while he worked for his PhD. But the Second World War intervened when Germany and Russian forces invaded Poland.

He joined the Polish Underground and was captured and escaped three times from the German Gestapo and Russian KGB.

He escaped to France via Yugoslavia and joined the Polish legion under the French army. After some bitter fighting and France fell, he managed to board an overloaded freighter and reached Gibraltar safely. From there he went to Britain.

In Britain, he joined the Royal Air Force as an airman and within a year had risen to the rank of Wing Commander. Later he served in an advisory group to London's Air Ministry, a post he held until 1948.

Immigrating to Canada with his Scottish wife, he first tried farming on a couple of acres on Lulu Island, but that failed, and he took the first job that came to hand — firing a boiler in a fruit cannery.

But Botany was his interest and he entered the University of British Columbia, where he won his Doctorate of Philosophy — the first in botany that University ever granted.

Szczawinski joined the provincial museum in 1956 under the late Dr. Clifford Carl and from the start become involved in pollution control, preservation of green belts, parks and conservation.

He and a group of citizens were largely responsible for preventing Thetis Lake Park from being hacked up by power transmission lines and logged.

He also worked with a group of scientists to establish ecological reserves in the province and on one occasion was silenced by former Premier Bennett for trying to save the last big game area in B.C.

He helped medical research on hay fever and allergies for five years and became a member of the Poison Centre at the Royal Jubilee Hospital.

As curator of botany, he has published a number of books and articles on botany, his latest one being on the flora of the Saanich peninsula.

Szczawinski believes that British Columbians can preserve their quality of life if they will speak up.

As far as he is concerned, he is going to continue being a spokesman for "nature."

He's retiring all right, but as he says, not from the battle to save nature and to provide people with a better environment.

Holiday From Strife

LONDON (Reuter) — A party of 28 school children from strife-hit areas of Northern Ireland flew to North America this week for an expenses-paid, six-week holiday.

Belfast housewife Sarah Hughes wrote to more than 50 United States and Canadian newspapers three years ago about the plight of children in the city.

A collection was started in Minnesota and the children were invited for a holiday in American homes.

Mrs. Hughes left London's Heathrow Airport today for Winnipeg before flying on to the U.S. She said most of the children, aged 9 to 11, had had at least one member of their family, often their fathers, killed in Northern Ireland.

"They all come from depressed areas and we had to provide clothes for one or two of them," she said.

100 PLUCKY FRENCHMEN

By PAUL MAJENDIE

PARIS (Reuter) — A middleaged businessman broke down and cried with the strain, a Paris taxi-driver kept a packet in his pocket to prove his will power while the other 98 gnawed desperately at liquorice sticks or just sat around fidgeting.

The 100 were a determined group of Parisians who stopped work for a week, went to a country retreat and tried to give up smoking.

By the end of the week 97 per cent proudly boasted that they had not lit up.

Radio France chief Michel Tauriac explained why he thought the campaign was such a success.

He said: "We transplanted Parisians to the tourist spot of Gerardmer in the Vosges area which gave them the impression of being on vacation. But we put them in an enclosed situation."

"The vegetarian diet which goes with disintoxication was given to them at their hotel. The 90-minute evening lecture sessions with doctors and psychologists really had a spectacular effect."

Slogans were dotted everywhere to remind the sorely tempted "five minutes pleasure cuts 16 minutes off your life".

But the strain proved considerable, Many complained of dizziness as a withdrawal symptom and one businessman said: "I rang up my wife and started to cry like a child. I couldn't stop."

The volunteers—including doctors, plumbers, lawyers, a helicopter pilot and pregnant woman—often resorted to compulsive nibbling of liquorice sticks as doctors graphically illustrated what cigarettes were doing to their insides.

One girl admitted: "You have to forget a smoker's gestures— looking for a packet of cigarettes in your pocket all the time and also thinking there is something missing between your fingers.

The much-publicized exercise was watched with considerable attention by Health Minister Simone Weil who has pledged to launch a nationwide campaign against the dangers of smoking.

She set up a 20-man commission to study the problem and the yhave come up with two major suggestions widely adopted by other Western countries — restricting cigarette advertisements and putting health warnings on packets.

In Mrs. Weil's eyes the important thing now is that "French people know exactly what are tobacco's snags for their health. What's worrying is the increase in tobacco consumption. If the campaign can put a brake on this, then it's a good thing".

BUFFET FIT FOR WALL

You can hang this buffet unit on your wall. This unit is really simple to build. It consists of two fir plywood boxes hung side by side. You put shelves inside on adjustable shelf supports and hang plywood doors on the front. The doors at the ends are covered with fabric.

You can build only one of these units if you don't have the wall space for both. Or, maybe you would like these units in your living room with a stereo speaker in each of the end sections. Once you have basic boxes, variations are endless.

To order the Wall Hung Buffet pattern No. 170, send $2.00 cheque or money order to:

Craps Best Bet, Statistics Show

By ROBERT MURPHY

RENO, Nev. (AP) — How good are your chances of striking it rich in the casinos? Not very, says Bill Eadington, an economics professor at University of Nevada, who recently compiled statistics on gambling.

Among his findings: for every $100 bet playing roulette over a prolonged period, you'll probably lose at least $5.50. For the same amount bet in Keno, you'll lose $25.

Statistics can be compiled on every aspect of gambling. The most widely used is the "expected loss" factor, a term which indicates how much money will be lost on every bet made.

Craps is the best game to play, according to this type of rating, Eadington said.

The expected loss on this game is 1.5 per cent, meaning that for every $100 bet, the player's loss will be around $1.50, he said.

Bacarrat has the next-lowest expected loss figure, with 2.5 per cent. Blackjack, or 21, is hard to judge with statistics because the quality of player must be considered.

Eadington said with a good player, the expected loss may be as low as one or two per cent. "A bad player who does everything wrong could have a loss factor of 10 per cent."

The expected loss on slot machines ranges from five to 25 per cent, depending on how the casinos have the machines set for payback, Eadington said.

"If a gambler just plays for an evening or a weekend, he has a good chance of ending up ahead for that period. But if he stays in the casino for a prolonged period of time, eventually the house advantage will just grind him away."

With the deck stacked so much against the player, it would seem that business would be going down, but the gaming industry here is growing.

The industry's gross taxable revenues topped $1 billion in 1974, a 14-per-cent increase over 1973's $878 million.

Eadington has his own philosophy of gambling.

"I don't encourage people to gamble, and I don't discourage them. Gambling is a form of entertainment, so people should realize that it's going to cost them money."

U.S. HOLDS 2 AS SPIES

WASHINGTON (AP) — FBI agents arrested two men Friday on charges of spying for the Soviet Union.

The FBI identified the two as Sarkis Paskalian, 36, who has been living in New York, and Sahag Dedeyan, 41, of Rockville, Md., a mathematician formerly employed by organizations doing secret defence work.

Both men are natives of Lebanon. Paskalian, who came to the United States in 1968, is a resident alien. Dedeyan is a U.S. citizen who held a top-secret clearance.

Paskalian was charged with conspiracy to gather classified defence information to aid a foreign country. The charge carries a maximum penalty of death.

Dedeyan was charged with not reporting the illegal photographing of national-defence information, a charge carrying a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Dedeyan worked for Operations Research Inc. of Silver Spring, Md., and was an associate mathematician at the Applied Physics Laboratory of Johns Hopkins University at Silver Spring from 1966 until September, 1973.

During that period, the FBI said, Paskalian approached Dedeyan, a distant relative.

Hair Falling Out

LONDON (Reuter) — The recent spell of hot weather in Britain is making people's hair fall out, experts say. One hospital says it has received more patients suffering from hair loss than normal for this time of year and experts blame it on the weather.

Comox Phase-Out

Within a few days no aircraft maintenance work will be done at Canadian Forces Base, Comox, leading to the eventual phasing out of 91 servicemen employed on this work.

Instead, planes from Comox and Summerside, P.E.I. will be flown to Greenwood, N.S. for repairs, the crews flying back replacement planes to the two bases.

Spokesman Capt. Val Cretney said the 91 men will not be transferred from the base but put on other duties, the cut in personnel being made through attrition over a 12-18 month period.

There are 1,700 servicemen and 300 civilians employed full-time at the up-Island base and Cretney said the cutback will have little or any impact on Comox's economy.

In addition to the Comox cutback, Greenwood is to lose 251 military positions and Summerside, 75.

One of the operational Greenwood squadrons will be phased out and six Argus aircraft lost.

Greenwood base commander Col. Allan Pickering said the squadron is due to be phased out by Sept. 1. He estimates an economic loss of $3.5 million to the community.

Sun Temple Orissa state landmark

Tourists can know India by visiting Orissa state

ORISSA, India — European and North American lion tamers could learn a trick or two for their circus acts by visiting this state located on Indian's east coast.

In fact, the average Canadian visitor might not even want to see big jungle cats go through circus paces at the crack of a whip again after witnessing the Adivasi tribes India's east coast.

Adivasi literally means tribal people. And right in the centre of Orissa State, these tribes can be seen. It is one of the few places left in the world where men in the state of nature can still be found.

Some of the hunters of the Adivasi tribe are actually capable of hypnotizing tigers! It's a unique experience to watch these men try to outduel jungle cats in this way — without aid of weapons or protective cages. And that's just for starters. They also have a peculiar way of curing snake bites. First, the blood-stream is closed off with a tourniquet, then the snake is lured back with flutes. Finally, the reptile is hypnotized and sucks back its own poison.

It may sound like something out of Ripley's "Believe it or Not" — or even a circus sideshow. But in this case, it happens to be true. The Adivasis are descendents of the people who lived in Orissa before the Aryan invasions from the north over 3,000 years ago. Today, the tribes are protected by the Indian government, as they own valley lands and may not sell without government permission. Of course, modern civilization has brought about some changes. For example, many trible people have left traditional hunting and farming behind to become workers in the iron fields.

For the most part, however, they remain unspoiled. Their skin is very dark, and gleams in the hot sunlight. Men still carry bows and spears, and wear basic loincloths. The women are also sparsely dressed, and walk carrying babies on their hips.

Their society is uninhibited. Unlike the rest of India, where the majority of marriages are arranged, the tribal people marry for love, and divorce if they so desire. The men and women dance to the beat of drums at frequent village gatherings which can last for hours, or even days, until everyone becomes totally exhausted.

The jungle area where the Adivasi Tribe lives comprises only a small part of Orissa, but the visitor with a bit of adventure in his veins will certainly enjoy seeing it. For those a little less inclined towards this sort of thing, Orissa is still a fascinating state. It has been said that if you know Orissa, you know India. In capsule form, the visitor can catch glimpses of the India lost in history's caverns before Christ was born, or the golden age of temple builders — and finally a modern country facing the world of industry. In addition, a classical dance form evolved in Orissa, and is still going strong. It is called the Odissi, and is still another visitor attraction.

All of these ingredients are set in fertile green plains, mountains, game-filled forests, beaches with some of the world's finest sand, water falls, and great rivers. Finally, add some of the holiest Hindu cities in India with their thousands of pilgrims, colourful festivals, holy men and centuries-old temples, and you have an attraction visitors won't soon forget.

The state lies on the shores of the Bay of Bengal, with an area of some 60,000 square miles. In the west are the flatlands reacxing out to the Eastern Ghats, where green valleys and five large rivers flow into the Bay of Bengal. In the upper regions and slopes are forests containing wild elephants and bengal tigers along with rare species.

Although there are over 15 million people in Orissa state, there is only one city with a population of over 100,000 people. The people, called Oriyas, are basically rural — simple, friendly people who follow the traditional craftsmanship and farming of their forefathers.

Little about Orissa is "Western", so for those with a lively curiosity, the state is bound to appeal.

In reality, however, recorded history can be traced back to about 260 B.C., where the edicts of Emperor Ashoka are carved in rock just five miles from the current capital of Bhabaneswar.

He fought a bloody war to conquer Kalinga, but repented and converted to the Buddhist way of non-violence. And although his religion eventually spread throughout India following Ashoka's conversion, strangely it did not last in the province itself.

Fascinating are the huge temples and other monuments created by the successive waves of conquerors. It is said that 7,000 temples once ringed the sacred lake Bindu Sagar.

The most impressive temples, however, are found in Bhubaneswar and Puri.

Bhubaneswar is the capital city, with two aspects of interest to visitors. There is the 20th century garden, and the picturesque town with its numerous temples. Within a six mile radius, it is possible to see a panorama of Orissa's art and history dating from 3 B.C. to 16 A.D. The city, with literally hundreds of temples, certainly merits the name "Cathedral City of India."

Puri, site of the famous Jagannath (Lord of the World) temple is one of India's holiest cities, perhaps second only to Banares, location of the famed Ganges River. About a dozen religious festivals are observed at Puri each year, the most interesting being Rathyatra, or Car Festival, commemorating a journey of Krishna. The huge wooden chariot which carried the image of Jagannath during the festival has given the word 'juggernaut' to the English language.

The temple itself, a magnificent structure built eight centuries ago, dominates the countryside for miles around. Lightly carved, the temple belongs to a period in Orissa's history when architects sought to impress the beholder with mass rather than ornamentation.

Luxury life at sea

By FRANK MACOMBER

ABOARD FAIRSEA (CNS) — After a day or so of soaking up sun on the decks of this luxury cruiser, you get to wondering if this kind of travel is for real or something out of the days of F. Scott Fitzgerald and the '20s.

Then you talk to some of the ship's officers and even to the president of Sitmar Cruises, which operates this cruise ship and her sister, the Fairwind.

Ocean travel is on the upswing, partly because the teenagers of the '60s have found out the passengers no longer bring steamer trunks aboard or wear dowager-type, down-to-the-heels dresses to the dining salon.

The younger generation has found out that middle-aged or even old folks can get with it at sea. So more and more they're beginning to book cruise on ships like the Fairsea and Fairwind.

On this week-long journey from Los Angeles along Mexico's Pacific coast as far south as Mazatlan the average age of the passengers is about 42. A few years ago it would have been closer to 50. Until the early 1970s young North Americans just weren't having any of this "shipboard idle" stuff. It was all part of the generation gap and just about as ill-considered.

Sitmar officials say their bookings for both the West Coast (Mexico-Canada-Alaska) and the East Coast (Caribbean-South America) cruises are picking up steadily, partly because it costs such a bundle to travel in Europe these days.

Nobody can enjoy $5 drinks and 85-cent coffee for long, even in West Germany, France or Italy.

J. P. Bland, Sitmar Cruises president, says cruise vacations are the swiftest-growing factor in the $30 billion-a-year international travel industry.

To achieve the climb back up, the modern-day floating luxury resorts have had to weather the head winds of an uncertain economy.

The best evidence that they have made it, says Bland, is the passenger population sailing on cruises out of U.S. ports these days.

Last year about a million cruise passengers were on board the 80 to 90 ships serving U.S. markets, the Sitmar president recalls.

"That's an increase of about 54 per cent over the 650,000 cruise passengers sailing in 1970," Bland points out.

This year the upward climb still appears to be holding firm, perhaps party because North Americans are less enchanted with auto and camper-motor home vacations than they were before the energy crisis began to take its toll.

But Bland has some other ideas about it, too.

"A cruise vacation is a different experience from just another week in the mountains or at the beach," he says. "Cruising is the type of vacation most of us need — a complete severing of our ties with the mainland and all its problems.

Bland concedes the price tag on a seven-day cruise might be higher than a week at a hotel — until you tack on the "hidden" costs of hotel life.

"On a cruise you know exactly how much your vacation will cost," Bland says. "Most people have a lot of trouble prebudgeting a hotel-based vacation."

Sitmar's package is typical of how the system works:

The price of a seven-day cruise, calling on major ports along Mexico's west coast "Riviera," begins at dockside at $350 per passenger for double occupancy. Passengers living in faraway Chicago can take the same cruise for only $75 more.

The package price of $425 represents a $217 savings per person in air fare and iscludes round-trip coach service, the cruise, ground transportation, porterage fees, federal and port taxes.

North Americans hit by economic uncertainties are cutting down on vacations but not crossing them off, Bland says.

"The tendency seems to be to hold on to one big annual vacation but to cut back on the number of short trips," he said. "Cruise vacations, for families, couples or singles, seem to meet the qualifications most people are looking for."

Cute coach

Barbara Jo Graves, tennis coach at a Palm Springs, Calif. high school, takes time to enjoy the sport at the Tennis Club in this sunny resort city. There are currently more than 240 public and private courts in the desert area.

TRAVEL TIPS

Finns don't drink, drive

By STAN DELAPLANE

DUBROVNIK, Yugoslavia — "This is a prosperous looking town. People are well-dressed. Shop windows full of luxury items you don't expect in Iron Curtain countries.

"Dubrovnik is the most popular resort on the Dalmatian coast. All red-tiled roofs climbing the foothills of the Montenegro mountains. Sunlight bouncing off white and yellow buildings as we came in dead slow over the blue, blue Adriatic."

(It's cruise season in the Mediterranean. Our Man in the Med is ending fourteen days and ten ports aboard the Golden Odyssey.)

"The main sightseeing is the old walled city. A cartoon castle with a Disney drawbridge. High grey battlements that stood up to Caesar's Own Mallorquin Stone Slingers. (How would you like to have THAT regimental tie?)

"Shops here close at one in the afternoon. Open again at 5 o'clock. That's the pattern for most ports in the Med. So shop early.

"A pocketful of dollar bills lets you buy small presents without ending up with a lot of foreign change."

The Golden Odyssey is operated by Royal Cruise Line of San Francisco. Greek flag. Greek crew. Anything wrong with it?

"Can't find much for complaint without being picky. I loved the Wooden Horse Bar but the Calypso Lounge seemed a little cold.

"I'd like more time in Palma, Mallorca. Less in Tangier. And I'd skip Gibraltar entirely and stay sunny on deck.

"Decor of ship is super. Service good. Food tops. One 747 airplane load (400 people) fills the ship. Land at Lisbon, fly back from Dubrovnik.

"You pick up jet lag from crossing so many time zones. But there's no getting around it."

(In Finland, O'Hara is winding up a Finnair inaugural that took her to the Arctic Circle, 65,000 reindeer and 35,000 Lapps.)

"Double check reservations. Firm up hotel and airline bookings. Ask questions. Hang in there. Communication breaks down and you can't speak the language.

"Fellow traveler was told at the airline office the plane was full. (She admitted she had no reservation.) She went to the airport. Showed a ticket at the gate and got right on without another word.

"Hotel said I didn't have a reservation (which I had) but agreed there might be a mistake. Gave me a room and I never heard about it again."

"You do NOT drink and drive in Finland. If you do, it's direct to jail. No exceptions. Therefore, the Finns appoint one person as driver for the evening. He doesn't touch a drop while the rest of the party zero in on Finlandia vodka."

"Taxis run about $3 for a dozen blocks. An extra 35 cents for evenings, weekends or holidays. I managed to hit all three at once. Jackpot!

"High skinny trams slide around Helsinki at reasonable prices. Trams 3B and 3T have an all-day tourist ticket all over Helsinki for 30 cents."

"Dinner for two at The Troikka, a Russian restaurant, was $45. Spiced steak with sweet-hot red peppers and red cabbage. Cooked and served on a sizzling black cast iron.

"Siberian bear soup for openers. Closed with vodka crepes and glasses of vodka with honey and limes."

"Hesperian Hotel is first-class at $35 single, $50 double. Dinner of wild mushroom salad, steamed turbot with fresh grated horseradish and white wine: $26.

"Fine dining room overlooking the sea.

"Finnish johns are a delightful array of sprays, geysers, gadgets and valves that only an engineer could understand. What else from a country whose national sport is the sauna bath?"

This was a Finnair inaugural of their new DC-10 service from New York. Touring inside Finland, Finnair gives pass for all Finland you can squeeze into fifteen days for $109. Senior citizens get 25 percent discount.

There's a boat to Leningrad with no Russian passport visa required. O'Hara said it sounded dull. Tour of cathedrals and tractor factories.

Before The Judge

Leonard Doward, charged June 10 with the kidnapping of two women and possession of an offensive weapon, pleaded guilty in Victoria provincial court Friday to a lesser charge of assault with intent to commit an indictable offence.

The crown withdrew the charges of kidnapping Sharon Marie Lowe and Susan Minerva and the charge of possession of the offensive weapon (a knife).

Doward, 26, of 606 Galiano, also pleaded guilty to impaired driving, which arose out of the same incident.

Prosecutor Nicholas Lang said Doward stopped his car in the 800-block Esquimalt Road 12:45 a.m. June 10 and approached 17-year-old Miss Lowe who was walking along the sidewalk. Doward pulled her half-way into his car, waved a knife before her and threatened to "rip your pretty little face." While Doward was adjusting his grip on Miss Lowe, she pulled herself free and fled to the nearest telephone where she called police.

At about 2 a.m. that same morning, Doward attempted a similar course of action upon 19-year-old Miss Langley. He parked his car in the 1300-block Broad, left the engine running and then stood by and waited a short distance from the car. Lang said Miss Langley walked up to the car to see why the engine had been left running. Doward came up from behind, held a knife to her throat and told her to get into the car. Miss Langlty managed to free herself by grabbing at the knife, cutting her hand in the struggle. She fled to the corner of Johnson and Broad where she stopped a car and had the driver follow Doward's vehicle.

Police joined in the pursuit and Doward was arrested shortly afterward on Gordon. When his blood-alcohol reading was found to be .15, he was charged with impaired driving and taken to Victoria police station where the girls identified him in a line-up.

Defence lawyer Brian Smith told the court Doward had been drinking excessively that evening.

Doward had given a lecture on electrical wiring at Naden on the afternoon of June 9, Smith said. The knife he had in his possession at time of arrest had been used during he lecture to cut the wiring. About 5 p.m. Doward went to Club 44 where he remained for four hours. He then went to Tudor House and continued drinking.

"It appears he left sometime after midnight, but his recollection after then is totally blank," Smith said.

He said Doward will undergo psychiatric treatment.

Doward was remanded to July 15 for presentence report and sentencing.

Judge William Ostler ordered Piara Bal held in jail when Bal appeared for the second consecutive day on charges related to a shooting incident at 990 Tolmie May 28.

Bal pleaded not guilty to making a phone call Thursday evening threatening death to his daughter, Balwinder Bal.

He had just been released that afternoon by Judge Douglas Campbell after arrest Wednesday evening.

Bal was charged with breach of a condition to stay away from his son-in-law Kehar Singh Pannu and his home at 990 Tolmie. The condition had been set May 29 by Judge Fred Green as a term of release on the charge of use of a firearm in a manner dangerous to his daughter and son-in-law.

But Bal was found by police Wednesday in a car parked near the home. He was released Thursday afternoon after Campbell defined 'near' to mean 10 city blocks from 990 Tolmie.

Bal, who has pleaded not guilty to all charges, will appear for trial Aug. 1, 14, and 15.

In traffic court Judge Harold Alder sentenced Harj Bains, 31, of 3117 Stevenson Place, to three months in jail and prohibited him from driving for nine months.

Bains had pleaded not guilty Nov. 21, 1974 to impaired driving Nov. 13 of that year, but changed his plea to guilty Thursday. It was Bains' third impaired driving offence.

A 19-year-old Haney youth, charged with wounding with intent following the stabbing June 19 of Frank Ross Ogilvie, 17, of 1609 Carberry Gardens, elected trial by judge and jury.

Preliminary hearing is set for Sept. 12.

Glen Scott Kelly remains free on a $5,000 bail.

SOVIET CHIEF KEEPS HOLD

MOSCOW — Despite his prolonged absences from public view in recent months, Soviet Communist Party leader Leonid Brezhnev appears to be maintaining a firm hold on the ruling Politburo.

Soviet sources, including several who claim access to the inner councils of party decision-naming, and senior diplomats from both East and West, agree that 63-year-old Brezhnev's health problems have not eroded his authority.

Quite the reverse, they say, the possibility that Brezhnev may be nearing the end of his tenure has simply underscored the difficulties to be faced in replacing him. The prevailing view now is that Brezhnev will not step down next year, as earlier had been speculated, unless his physical condition takes a sharp turn for the worse.

In spite of continuing economic shortcomings at home and the ever-present uncertainties on the foreign scene, the Soviet Union has enjoyed probably the most stable and successful period of its history in the decade of Brezhnev's leadership.

And among the aging and conservative top-level party functionaries, there is no disposition for any change that is not essential.

"Who would dare argue with stability?" as one Russian put it.

The Soviet leader is entering a period of unusually heavy and important activity here and abroad — a series of summits to be followed by the 25th party congress next February. The strong endorsements for Brezhnev being passed along to diplomats and journalists by their Soviet contacts may well be an effort to counter the impression that he is something of a lame duck.

Brezhnev's health, however, remains a substantial question mark. He was out of action for nearly two months last winter and then dropped out of sight for a month in May. At a relatively advanced age, with a record of respiratory illnesses and reported heart trouble, he is clearly not a man at his peak.

The most apparent difficulty in public is a slurring of words variously attributed to dental and jaw problems. The malady was treated recently by a team of West German doctors flown to Moscow for the purpose, sources say, and they told Western diplomats there was nothing seriously wrong.

As Brezhnev voted in Soviet elections ten days ago, he was asked about his health by correspondents. He is fine, he replied, "as you can see."

All available indicators, analyzed in detail by diplomatic specialists here, show Brezhnev's dominance in the Politburo to be unchanged. The ousting in April of Alexander Shelepin, long regarded as a potential rival, consolidated Brezhnev's position, which was already very strong.

On the placards that dot Moscow's main boulevards and transport centres, in newspapers and broadcasts, Brezhnev is presented as the maximum authority of all matters. There is nothing new about this, but if anything, the attention Brezhnev gets is increasing.

In the elections earlier this month, for places in the nominal legislatures of the 15 Soviet republics, Brezhnev received by far the most nominations (although he declined to accept all but one) which the experts say is a reflection of his growing stature.

One element of Brezhnev's strength is that no possible successor or anything like comparable influence has emerged. The accepted wisdom is that should Brezhnev step down, he would be replaced on a short term basis by Andrei Kirilenko, who is 69. But that is widely regarded as only a temporary solution.

The departure of Brezhnev would certainly mark the start of active manoeuvering for leadership and eventually mean a substantial overhaul of the Politburo — a prospect few of its 15 members can be expected to favor.

Consequently, the likelihood of anything dramatic happening in the months ahead is considered — at least now, in these warm, early summer days — to be very slight.

Chinese Get Warning

PEKING (Reuter) — The Chinese, who are among the world's heaviest smokers, have received a rare warning about the dangers of tobacco.

The June issue of the physical culture magazine New Sports has told China's athletes the habit will affect their heart, blood and nervous systems. No mention of cancer was made.

Turkish Unrest Grows

Manchester Guardian

ANKARA — In a week of clashes between Turkish Social Democrats and right-wing extremists, two people have been killed and more than 200 people either wounded or taken into custody. There is every reason to believe that these bloody clashes are just the beginning of a new period of unrest in Turkey.

Monday, a Turkish army private and a young man were killed in street battles between members of Bulent Ecevit's Social Democratic Republican People's party and the so-called Commandos of the neo-Fascist National Action party in Diyarbakir.

Diyarbakir is the biggest town in eastern Turkey, 450 miles from the capital, and has a population which is predoninantly Kurdish. The fighting started when the commandos hoisted their flag, depicting the legendary grey wolf which led Turks from central Asia to Asia Minor, over the Medieval Diyarbakir Castle.

The Social Democrats pulled down the flag and burnt it, replacing it with their party's red flag with six white arrows. Tempers then flared, and the two groups fought with stones, clubs, pistols and explosives until after midnight, when tanks and army units were brought in. The result was two killed, six wounded and 59 taken into custody.

Tuesday morning, violence erupted in Ankara between university students and the police. It occurred during university entrance exams, when police arrested some students distributing leaflets. Students stoned and shot at the police, wounding six, two of them gravely.

Last Saturday, a group of religious and racial extremists had violently disrupted a rally for Ecevit, at Gerede, 60 miles north of Ankara. A day before that, Franatics from the same group attacked a theatre audience in a northern city watching a play, which they opposed for being radical.

Tuesday, Ecevit told the National Assembly that the right-wing coalition under Suleyman Demirel was trying to remain in power by brute force. He accused the government of protecting and encouraging the fanatics.

"However strong a state may be it cannot sustain such anarchy, aggression and brute force fed by the government," he said.

"However much endurance a people with self-respect may have, it cannot tolerate this much pressure and brute force."

Ecevit claimed that under the present administration security forces had no security of life, let alone the people. "For the last time I call on the government to govern," he said. "If it cannot do so, if it does not have the strength to govern, I call on it to resign before bringing greater calamities upon the country."

Not unexpectedly, fighting broke out between the Social Democrats and the right-wingers during Ecevit's speech, which was frequently interrupted by heckling.

Demirel's government consists of four right-wing parties, the biggest of which is his own pro-private enterprise Justice party. It has been in power for nearly four months and was organized, basically, as a bulwark against Ecevit's Social Democrats. Although the coalition enjoys a parliamentary majority, Demirel lacks a similar majority in the electorate, which has shifted to a great extent toward Ecevit after his handling of the Cyprus affair last summer. It is very likely that Ecevit will come to power alone when elections are held. These are scheduled for autumn 1977, although partial senate elections, which will reveal the electorate's real inclinations, will be held this October.

The clashes which are taking place now are a reflection of the nervousness of the right-wing concerning its diminishing chances of being re-elected to power and the Social Democrats' impatience at being out of power.

The army, which is a formidable power in Turkish political life, has shown no desire to meddle. But reliable reports indicate that the generals are worried about growing political violence. There is no doubt that the army will exercise some sort of restraint if violence gets out of hand as it did in the turbulant years before 1971, which ended with a military intervention. Demirel was likewise prime minister at the time.

Hospitals Favor Strikes

Strike votes taken by the Health Sciences Association at 10 of the 81 hospitals in B.C. where the association in certified, show union members voting about 90 per cent in favor of strike action.

In the only strike vote to be taken so far in a Vancouver Island hospital, HSA members at Nanaimo General Hospital voted Thursday night 91.8 per cent in favor of a strike.

The union, which represents technicians, pharmacists, physiotherapists and other paramedical professional hospital workers, will conduct strike votes in the remaining 71 B.C. hospitals by the end of next week.

No date has yet been set for votes at Victoria General, where there are 83 HSA members, or Royal Jubilee, where there are 140 members.

Other votes tallied so far include: Terrace and Kitimat, 100 per cent; Richmond, 88 per cent; Trail, 90; Kelowna, 86; Kamloops, 92; Prince George, 92; Royal Columbian, 90; and Chilliwack, 85.

The 2,500-member union, which only recently removed a no-strike clause in its constitution, has been negotiating with the B.C. Health Association since December.

Mediator Ed Sims has withdrawn from the talks and will present his recommendations to both sides late next week.

HSA executive director Jack Campbell said today he couldn't see how the recommendations could be favorable "because we're so far apart."

If the recommendations are rejected, Sims will turn in his report to labor Minister Bill King and Campbell said the union would then "be serving strike notice immediately."

The union is seeking parity for technicians, who make up the majority of the HSA membership, with registered nurses.

The technicians, who require a year more training than nurses, are currently paid about $200 a month less.

EPP, BARRETT TO MEET

Premier Dave Barrett said Friday he will meet with deputy minsiter for corrections E. W. Epp, ordered June 16 by the government to take a three-month leave of absence.

Epp has requested a meeting with the premier to discuss the order, handed to him without reason by Attorney-General Alex Macdonald.

Epp was hired two years ago as director of corrections, and soon after promoted to deputy minister.

He said at the time of the order he is "upset and completely in the dark" about the directive and because he was appointed by a cabinet order in council, he had none of the usual avenues of protest or protection offered by the Public Service Commission.

"I've read Epp's request to see me and will make an effort to see him," said Barrett.

Asked to define reasons for the directive, Barrett said he doesn't know anything about it, "but I'll see Mr. Epp."

Music Making the Key To Students' Summer

Beginning Monday, and for the next two months, the campus of St. Michael's University School will be the scene of much music-making.

For eight weeks summer study will be laced with outdoor fun as students pursue learning on a busman's holiday.

First to occupy the campus will be violinist-conductor Clayton Hare and his pianist wife, Dorothy Swetnam, a couple who have been coming to Victoria for the past several years to offer summer tuition to students from as widely-separated points as Venezuela, new Zealand and Newfoundland.

Their sessions will begin Monday and continue through to July 26 and include a gala concert at the Empress Hotel, July 25.

The Hares have added a cello teacher and vocal coaching under Leonard Mayoh to this year's schedule.

On July 28 the Shawnigan School of the Arts will take over, continuing through Aug. 28.

This international school, which was founded at Shawnigan Lake four years ago, has a star-studded faculty in the areas of strings, chamber music, keyboard, woodwind, voice, pottery, dance and composition.

Included this year are Canada's Orford String Quartet and England's Orion Piano Trio. Teachers from the United States include cellists Mihaly Virizlay and George Ricci; pianist Zadel Skolovsky and harpsichordist Joel Spiegelman as well as violinist Ruggiero Ricci.

Italian double bassist Lucio Buccarella, English pianist Clive Lythgoe, French duo guitarists Ako Ito and Henri Dorigny and German viola-vocal artist Rita Noel are on the faculty.

Canada has provided flutist Robert Aitken, composer Jean Coulthard and mezzo-soprano Phyllis Mailing as well as dance artist Anna Wyman and Chinese-Canadian potter Wayne Ngan.

Many of these artists will be presenting concerts which will be open to the public and there will also be student concerts during the four-week period.

Barrett Reaffirms Confidence in King

Premier Dave Barrett said Friday he has not lost confidence in Labor Minister Bill King despite an attack on the minsiter by the British Columbia Federation of Labor.

The premier said King is the best labor minister the province has had and added that the New Democratic Party government does not represent any special interest group.

"We are a party to serve the interests of all the people of this province, not one special section," he said.

"The minister of labor has done an outstanding job and I support him completely."

Len Guy, BCFL secretary-treasurer, said Thursday the federation has lost confidence in King because policies contained in amendments to the labor code, passed by the legislature earlier in the day.

Guy said the federation was concerned about the increased powers granted the labor relations board in the amendments.

During the debate in the legislature, the amendments giving the LRB more powers were opposed by three government members — Colin Gabelmann (NDP — North Vancouver-Seymour), Harold Steves (NDP — Richmond) and Rosemary Brown (NDP — Vancouver-Burrard).

Imports Cut

LONDON (Reuter) — The British government plans to restrict the import of crocodiles, alligators and some species of turtles in need of conservation, an announcement by Parliament said Friday.

Drug Gouge Alleged

VANCOUVER (CP) — A Pharmacare specialist said Friday about 12 of 515 pharmacists in the Pharmacare program have overbilled the British Columbia government $5,400.

Patrick Tidball declined to give other details in an interview, except to say the government is helping the B.C. professional pharmacists to police their members involved in Pharmacare.

He said this means the government won't have to increase its own staff.

Society president Tony Biln said his group intends to hire a full-time pharmaceutical services officer to act as a liaison between the government and the pharmacists.

"If evidence indicates a pharmacy is not complying with rule set down in the Pharmacare contract we would be empowered to inspect and audit the pharmacy submissions and to make recommendations to government based on the findings," said Biln.

HAYWARD—In loving memory of a dear husband, father, and grandfather Gordon, who passed away June 28, 1974.

He died as he lived, everyones' friend, missed by his loving wife Dolores, and family.

THEY SHALL GROW NOT OLD, AS WE WHO ARE LEFT GROW OLD, AGE SHALL NOT WEARY THEM, NOR THE YEARS CONDEMN. AT THE GOING DOWN OF THE SUN, AND IN THE MORNING, WE WILL REMEMBER THEM.

Sea Lion Finds Refuge

MOSCOW (Reuter) — Izvestia says the crew of a Soviet refrigerator ship plying the South Atlantic has just spent a week looking after a sea lion which clambered on board to escape a pack of attacking tiger sharks.

The newspaper says it was probably the first time a sea lion had sought help from man, although, like dolphins, they are known not to fear humans.

During its week's convalescence on board the Prokopyevsk, Izvestia says the creature had a bad wound in its side cured by the ship's doctor. Once recovered, it flopped around the deck trumpeting with joy to find such generous friends.

Dutch Princess Weds

Guillermo signs register

BAARN, The Netherlands (UPI) — Princess Christina of the Netherlands married Cuban-born American Jorge Guillermo today in a private eucharistic service at Queen Juliana's Soestdijk palace.

The couple, both 28 years old, exchanged vows with the queen and her husband Prince Bernhard in attendance.

Ten friends of the couple from the Netherlands, the United States and Canada acted as witnessses at the wedding before the Rev. Bernard Bot.

The princess wore a dress of white organza trimmed with old lace created by New York couturier Andrew Koval. It had almost no train. Old lace substitued for a veil.

The bride held a bouquet of white roses and lilies of the valley.

After the ceremony, the couple scheduled a civil ceremony at Baarn town hall and finally an ecumenical service in the 13th century cathedral in nearby Utrecht.

$100,000 Winner Hard to Convince

LONDON, Ont. (CP) — An elusive London woman, who had a hard time convincing herself she had won one of the $100,000 grand prizes in the Wintario lottery draw Thursday night, was identified Frdiay.

Audrey Kabakos said in an interview that she thought she held winning ticket 70600, series 17 Thursday night but was not positive. So she took two sleeping pills and went to bed without telling her husband, George, about her possible win.

She phoned Bill Brady, host of an open-line radio show on CFPL, on Friday morning and gave only her first name but got confirmation that she had the winning ticket.

When Kabakos, a bartender, went to work at noon, his wife still had not told him they were $100,000 richer.

"I kept looking at the ticket and asking if it really was the ticket," she said.

Mrs. Kabakos, who came to Canada from Greece 26 years ago, was tracked down by the news media when [illegible] person telephoned to say [illegible] recognized her voice on the open-line show.

Kabakos, who bought the ticket for his wife, heard the good news from a waitress at work.

He said he is thinking of retiring from his job.

Boilermakers To Hold New Election

The international president of the boilermakers' union has ruled that another election must be held for the position of business manager of the Victoria local, a union official said today.

Local president C. R. Fuller said today another election would be held soon, but no date has been set. Until the new election, Fuller said, Neil Hindle will remain in the position of business manager.

Hindle was defeated in the June 14 election by Walter Fredericksen, but before the ballets were counted Hindle challenged the results on the grounds that there were "irregularities in constitutional conduct before the balloting."

The local elections committee upheld Hindle's challenge and it was then turned over to the international president to decide whether a new election would be called.

Hindle was not available for comment today.

ADVERTISERS!

DO YOU HAVE AN IMAGE?

- I DON'T KNOW. WHAT DO YOU MEAN — "DO I HAVE AN IMAGE?"

A good advertising image is a mental picture that reflects the kind of merchandise or service being offered for sale. For example: A quality furniture store should LOOK like a quality furniture store not a bargain hunter's paradise. And a budget priced store should always look like what it IS — so that it attracts the kind of people who are looking for the kind of merchandise it sells.

- YOU MEAN THE RITZ SHOULDN'T LOOK LIKE JOE'S DINER?

That's exactly what we mean. And Joe's Diner shouldn't look like The Ritz either.

- HOW DO I GET AN IMAGE?

Well, first, you decide what kind of store you are — what sort of people you're appealing to, and then you design all your advertising to fit. You stick to the same style, so that people recognize your ad as YOURS as soon as they see it.

- WHAT'S THE ADVANTAGE?

Well, like we said — you attract the right kind of customer to begin with. You're not going to sell a $900 dining suite to someone who's looking for a 79.95 kitchen set anyway, so why waste your advertising dollars? And people who want elegant dining facilities are going to be disappointed if all you serve is chili-burgers for 1.69

- ANYTHING ELSE?

Yes. By seeing your company advertise in a consistent manner, the public learns to gain confidence in YOUR firm. It establishes YOU in the mind of the people as a reliable, ongoing firm that knows its business — one that is going to be there to stand behind what it sells for years to come.

- BUT I DON'T KNOW ANYTHING ABOUT DESIGNING ADS. THEN WHAT?

That's what your two daily newspapers can do for you. We have a team of sales people who've been in the business a long time. They are trained to advise you on your budget. And, backing them up, is a team of artists and copy-writers who are trained to design an advertising campaign that will reflect your image and up your profits by increasing your business at a sure, steady rate.

- WHAT IS AN ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN ANYWAY?

That's a planned series of advertisements designed to do a specific job. It's the only way to advertise effectively. You establish your goals; our account representative brings them to the creative people, who work out the best way to reach your target. They use their imagination and their knowhow to think up something especially for you.

- HOW DO I KNOW I'LL LIKE IT?

You're given an artist's rough of your ad campaign so you can discuss it with others in your firm, and with your account rep. before you start the series. And re-vamp if necessary. Then, you get proofs of your ads after they've been typeset and the art is in place.

- HOW DO I KNOW I CAN AFFORD IT?

Because your account rep. knows your business; he knows what your advertising budget should be, based on your volume and what your cost-to-sell figures should be. So, when the creative department designs your ads, these figures are borne in mind so that the amount of space you buy fits in with what you can afford.

- BUT ISN'T IT EXPENSIVE TO HAVE THIS SPECIAL TREATMENT?

It costs no more than just buying space. Our creative team has books and books of headings, borders, drawings, sketches, and many different type styles to utilize. They are creative people who can put these things to good use for your benefit at no extra charge. They'll make up a series of ads that reflect the image you want to create, so that your ads are YOURS and YOURS ALONE.

Queen Elizabeth To Visit U.S.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Queen Elizabeth will make a state visit to the United States next year to join in celebrating the bicentennial of the declaration of independence, which describes her great-great-great-great-grandfather, King George III, as "a tyrant . . . unfit to be the ruler of a free people."

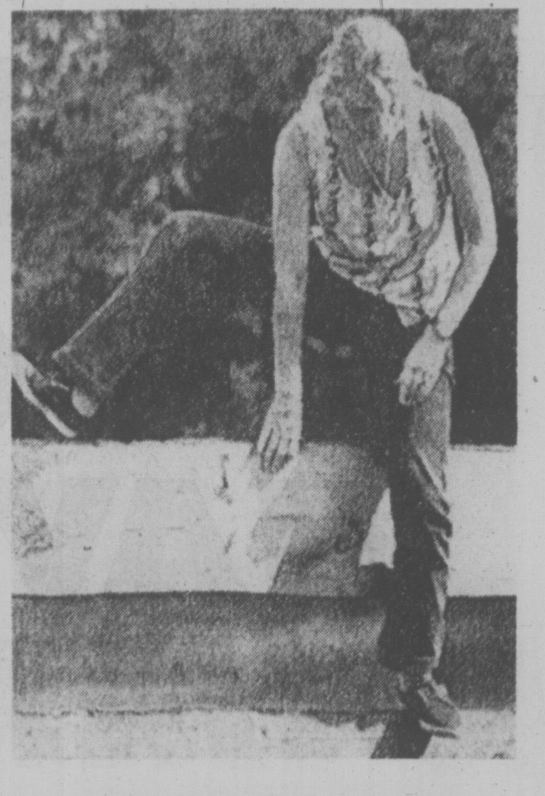
A White House announcement said Friday, "the president has invited her majesty Queen Elizabeth II and the Duke of Edinburgh to pay a state visit to the United States from July 7-11, 1976, during the bicentennial year. The invitation has been accepted with pleasure."

Although she spent three days as a tourist in Honolulu last month, the British monarch has not visited this country since 1957, when she and Prince Philip visited Washington and the Jamestown Festival marking the 150th anniversary of the first permanent British colony in the new world.

An embassy spokesman said that since the trip is almost a year away, full plans had not been worked out and the royal couple's itinerary was not known.

The visit starts three days after the 200th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence.

The bulk of that document is a scathing attack upon King George III that accuses him "of cruelty and perfidy scarcely paralleled in the most barbarous ages, and totally unworthy of the head of a civilized nation."



Princess Anne tours the course

Anne Shows Her Temper

HAMILTON, Mass. (UPI) — Britain's Princess Anne, at odds with the press after a rowdy news conference, joined some 90 other contestants Friday to start the U.S. open championship horse trials.

The princess and her husband, Capt. Mark Phillips, stalked from a media reception Thursday night after a sharp exchange with reporters who refused to follow her suggestion that they "put their pads away."

Actual competition in the championships at the Myopia Hunt Club began with the compulsory dressage exercises Friday. The speed and endurance test will come today and jumping will be conducted Sunday.

Princess Anne, clad in blue jeans and a T-shirt, and Phillips arrived Thursday night at the party barn on the estate of Neil R. Ayer, president of Ledyard Farm Horse Trials Inc., for the reception for the British equestrian team. The approximately 85 reporters were told to leave all microphones and cameras outside.

When he discovered the reporters were there on business, not pleasure, Phillips yelled at Clarkson Lindley, media relations director, "What is this all about. We were told to be down here for a drink and an off-the-record chat. We've been waiting around here for 10 minutes. Someone had just better tell us what is going on. This looks pretty formal to me."

Princess Anne's famous temper flared when she was asked to comment on England's problems with inflation and the pound.

"An amazing question!" she said. "Do you really expect me to answer that?"

SAN DIEGO — Los Angeles Police Chief Ed Davis thinks California's "pornography, pansies and pothead lawmakers" who passed a bill to reduce marijuana smoking penalties were "gooney birds" for giving law enforcement a "no-win policy" to fight crime.

Davis called for a referendum to repeal the measure if Gov Edmund Brown signs it into law.

Brown has not said if he will sign or veto the marijuana reform bill sent to him Thursday, but has indicated he favors the law. The measure reduces most pot possession cases to misdemeanors, subjecting most offenders to traffic-type citations instead of arrest.

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — Television writer-producer Rod Serling, in critical condition after open heart surgery, apparently suffered a heart attack while in the operating room, a hospital spokesman said Friday.

Serling, 50, known for his Twilight Zone television series about weird and unexplainable events, underwent a 10-hour coronary bypass operation Thursday to improve the blood supply to the heart.

The hospital quoted doctors as saying he was very critical.

OFFER SPURNED

LONDON — Uganda has spurned an offer by a young British business-woman to go to bed with President Idi Amin in return for the release of British lecturer Denis Hills, 61, under sentence of death for treason.

Patricia Richards, a 29-year-old divorcee, told reporters Wednesday in Bristol, England, that she thought the Ugandan president was threatening to execute Hills because he secretly wanted to be loved.

She said she was ready to talk to Amin and was "quite prepared to go to bed with him if this is what he wishes."

A Uganda radio broadcast monitored Friday night n London said that Mrs. Richards had "equated Hills' life to a sex affair."

It said Amin's moral standards cannot be so low as to accept the offer "in exchange for a criminal's life."

LETTER DRAWS SUSPENSION

OTTAWA — Supply and Services Minister Jean-Pierre Goyer Friday told the Commons a $25,000-a-year public servant was handed a three-month suspension because he "exceeded the limits" by publicly criticizing his superiors on department administration and policy.

Suggesting absence of restrictions of this type could lead to departmental "anarchy," Goyer made it clear there are no plans to rescind the suspension of Arthur J. Stewart.

Stewart, an engineering procurement officer in the supply and services department and president of the 8,000-member Supply and Services Union of the Public Service Alliance of Canada, was suspended after publication of a letter he wrote accusing Goyer of empire building and wasteful purchasing procedures.

Under questioning from Stuart Leggatt (NDP — New Westminster) Goyer said he respected the fundamental right of any union officials to attempt to improve working conditions for members of his union but that the complaints should not have been made publicly.

"I know Mr. Stewart is facing an election soon and perhaps he wanted some publicity," the minister observed.

OFF TO RUSSIA BEFORE 'COLLAPSE'

VANCOUVER (CP) — On Monday, Andrei Vereschagin will step onto a freighter with his 13-year-old son Doos and wave goodbye to Canada forever.

Their new home will be the Soviet union.

Vereschagin, 50, will send for his wife and daughters once he gets established in Rostov, some 600 miles south of Moscow.

Born of Russian parents in Saskatchewan, he said Friday his native country "is going to collapse; I want a better life for my children."

"Drugs, crime, unemployment, pollution . . . you name it, Canada has it. And things will only get worse. I want to do better than that for my family."

Vereschagin, who taught welding in adjacent Burnaby for nine years before taking a job at Cariboo College in Kamloops two years ago visited relatives in the Soviet Union in 1971.

The trip "opentd my eyes to a far better way of life."

"Our values are for the buck. Their values are for people, and regardless of what you hear or read the people there enjoy life more than we do."

"I was impressed with their friendliness and honesty. Their standard of living is quickly approaching Canada's. And that's to say nothing of their quality of life which now is far better than Canada's."

Vereschagin, who said he has been considering the move for 10 years, applied to the Soviet consulate in Ottawa about 18 months ago and last September received permission to emigrate.

He and Doug will stay with relatives until he can rent an apartment "for a maximum of five per cent of my income," or buy a three-bedroom condominium "for about $1,900.

"Most people in the United States or Canada still see the Soviet Union as it was after the war . . . a country of sad, unhappy people. We're being brainwashed; it's completely different now.

"They have a better way of life. We say we have freedom, but freedom is different things to different people. How much freedom does the senior citizen have who must spend his last days eating tea and crumptets—or even dog food. That's not freedom."

He said "dope is touching almost everyone here . . . . I want something better than that for my kids."

Vereschagin's wife, Helen and daughters, Judy, 18 and Letty, 16, are staying in Grand Forks, and will join him and his son when he begins a job and has a place for them to stay.

While Vereschagin cites everything from better sanitation to better transportation as reasons to live in the Soviet Union, one of his major concerns is an increase in violence in Canada.

"All we see on television is blood and guts. Drugs are being forced on the kids and our police are armed to the teeth.

"For a country with a church on every corner we're very violent. "I'll tell you, now's the time to get out."

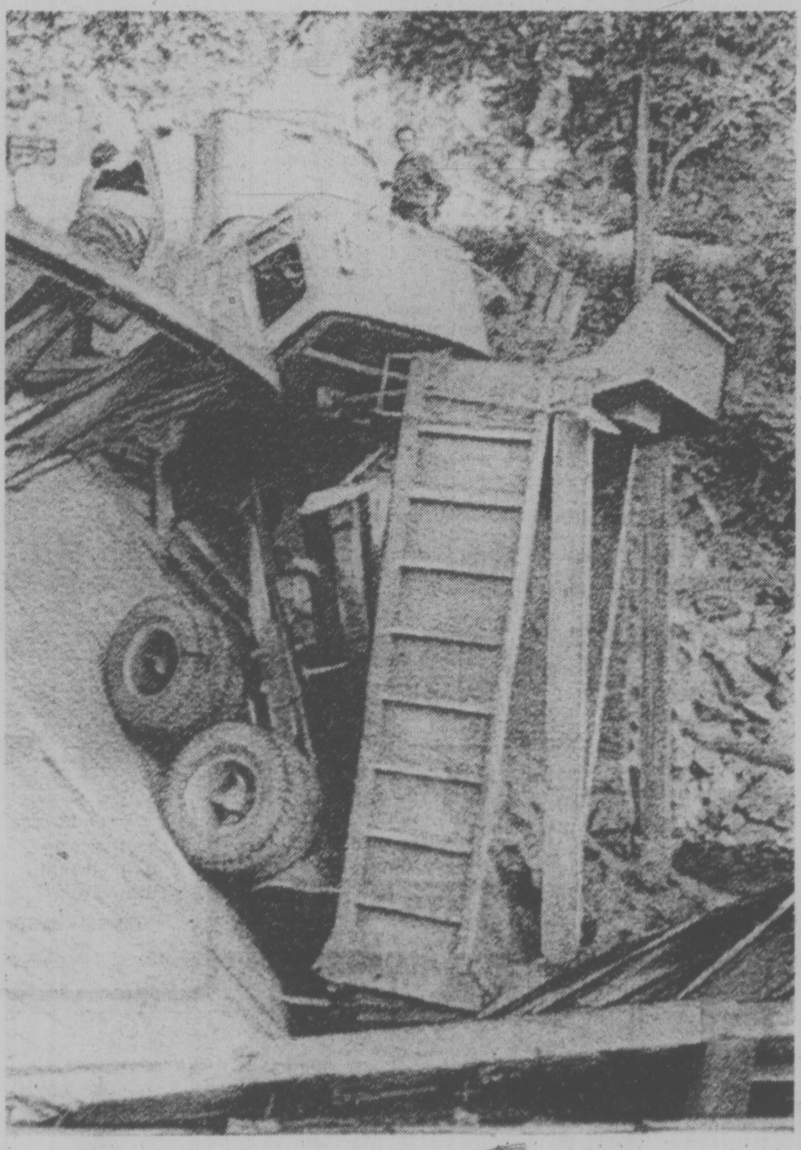
'SILLY, PETULANT' ACT—IWA

Forest Contract Out



UPTURNED TRUCK was too much for a bridge 25 miles northeast of Kingston, Ontario. The tandem truck carrying six yards of topsoil fell 15 feet into the Gananoque River. The driver was uninjured. Load limit on the bridge is two tons and a new bridge was scheduled for next year.

The forest industry's cancellation of its master agreement with the 29,000 member coast local of the International Woodworkers of America was a "silly, petulant thing to do," Duncan IWA president Fernie Viala said today.

Viala, whose 4,000-member Local 1-80 is among the largest in the union, said the contract cancellation announced Friday by Forest Industrial Relations which bargains for the forest companies, is an attempt to force the IWA into a strike.

"But we have no intention of accommodating them, at this time," Viala said.

The contract cancellation was the first such action to be taken in the industry's labor relations history. The IWA contract expired June 14 but normal practice is to continue operating under the old contract until a new one is signed.

The IWA is counting its strike vote ballots which will be released next week.

FIR vice-president Keith Bennett said the move was brought about by an "impossible situation" which arose from an arbitration ruling last week in favor of the union.

Under the IWA contract any disagreement over contract language interpretation must be taken to arbitration before a judge.

In this case, the arbitration initiated by the IWA resulted in a ruling which grants travel time payments to fallers after a working day of 7½ hours.

Travel time, for other woods workers other than fallers, is that portion of time in excess of nine hours, required to take the workers from the marshalling point, to the work site and back to the marshalling point.

But fallers have a different hours-of-work clause in the master agreement and the judge interpreted that clause to mean that a faller's day on the work site is 6½ horus and that any time over and above 7½ horus would be subject to travel time payments.

Travel time is paid at a straight hourly rate, unless it brings the working day in excess of 10 hours when the rate jumps to time-and-a-half.

Bennett said the arbitration award was a fundamental alteration of the intent of the coast agreement and said it "holds immense long-term implications of cost for the industry."

Although the master agreement has been cancelled, Bennett said, the industry will voluntarily observe all other portions of the expired contract except for the travel time provisions for fallers.

He said both he and regional IWA president Jack Munro were both parties to the original agreement which only granted travel time payments to fallers after nine hours.

"As the union knows full well, the action was an attempt to acquire benefits for its members through a tech-

Gandhi Steps Up Crackdown

NEW DELHI — The Indian government today suspended five basic individual rights guaranteed by the constitution, strengthening Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's crackdown on political opponents.

A government spokesman said nearly 900 persons have now been arrested since Mrs. Gandhi announced an emergency decree Thursday to combat a "widespread conspiracy" to undermine the nation's security. Opposition figures said the figure was closer to 3,500.

The prime minister told a radio audience Friday the prisoners were "being treated well and said she was sure the emergency will be lifted soon."

All but one of the capital's 14 daily newspapers appeared on the streets today for the first time in three days but had large blank spaces where news had been censored.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Gandhi today made her first cabinet change since proclaiming a national emergency, naming V. C. Shukla as information minister, the post that implements new censorship regulations.

Censorship Protested

Shukla, former head of the planning commission, switched places with Inder Kumar Gujral, who had been chief of the information ministry for three years.

Foreign observers in New Delhi said this week the suspension of civil liberties and the opposition arrests seem to have been precipitated primarily by the increasing unity of her right-wing opponents.

An analysis by Washington Post correspondent Lewis M. Simons noted that until the court decision convicting Mrs. Gandhi of corrupt election practices, her opposition had been hodgepodge of squabbling parties. In national elections, her Congress party seldom won a clear majority, but it traditionally emerged as the winner because anti-Congress Party votes were spread thin among the warring opposition parties.

The Congress Party learned the wisdom of divide-and-rule from the British, India's long time masters. The party realized that it faced no serious threat while its opposition lacked unity.

Opposition More Unified

The move toward opposition unity came with dramatic swiftness. Two weeks ago, a six-party coalition known as the Jawata Morpha (People's Front), humbled the Congress Party by winning 85 seats in state elections in Gujara.

Other factors behind Mrs. Gandhi's moves may have included:

—The Congress Party itself, the only party to govern India since it achieved independence, was beginning to show some signs of breaking its standard of discipline in favor of morality. Some members of the party, obscured for years beneath thick layers of power and wealth, suggested that Mrs. Gandhi should follow the court's ruling and step down from the prime ministry.

—The judiciary, which critics had attacked in recent years as an effete tool of the ruling party, had shown extraordinary courage and independence in applying the letter and spirit of the law to an all-powerful prime minister.

MINISTER HALTS WORK ON DIKE

VANCOUVER (CP) — Jeanne Sauve, federal environment minister, ordered a halt to work on a controversial section of the Fraser River dike between Roberts Bank and the Tsawwassen ferry terminal Friday.

MLA Carl Liden (NDP—Delta) and a group led by the B.C. Wildlife Federation previously said the diking work was silting up the south arm of the Fraser to the detriment of salmon runs and was doing other environmental damage.

Bill Otway, BCWF executive director, said he received a wire Friday from Mme. Sauve in which the minister confirmed she has ordered a halt to the diking work. She also said that officials of her department and representatives of the provincial government will meet shortly to set up a study to determine if the work should continue or be abandoned.

The minister said the study "will have to assure the value of the estuary will not be destroyed before diking work may be continued."

Allmand Shift On Punishment

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Solicitor General Warren Allmand said today he would give "serious consideration" to a demand for restoration of the death penalty made by a federation of 143 Quebec police forces.

The federation wants the death penalty for all persons convicted of pemedidated murder.

Raising the question in the commons Friday was Adrien Lambert (SC-Bellechasse). He pointed out that the Quebec Police Federation at its annual meeting in Longueil urged Ottawa to stop commuting death sentences imposed by the courts.

The federation groups some 9,300 members of 143 municipal police forces in the province.

Earlier in the annual meeting the president of the Quebec Provincial Police Association said his 4,000 members might consider strike action to back up their demand for capital punishment. Other police officers at the meeting said "tempers are heating up" although they thought a threat to strike was going too far.

The federation vice-president Robert Miron warned that government inaction in the face of growing police demands to restore capital punishment "may make the situation critical in the near future."

Allmand told the commons he has not yet received the written request from the federation. He promised to scrutinize his mail carefully next week adding "we do give serious consideration to all correspondence of this nature, especially from police associations."

Meanwhile, the solicitor-general component of the Public Service Alliance of Canada—the representative of federal prison employees—also called Friday for the resumption of capital punishment.

A spokesman for the component made the call when announcing a special executive meeting to be held Sunday to discuss the shooting of two prison guards in Montreal Friday by a prisoner they were escorting to a hospital.

One guard died later.

ANNIVERSARY FOR CRYSTAL

Just a few weeks ago Victoria city council decided to spend $1.5 million on restoring the abandoned Crystal Garden as an arboretum attraction, so it seemed appropriate this week to mark the 50th anniversary of the building's formal opening (see page 7).

Pictures from the Victoria city archives collection recall the old girl in her heyday, as a purveyor of palm court elegance and fun, while in sad contrast we see the Crystal's present state of decay.

NEWS BRIEFS

Deaths Hit 111

NEW YORK (UPI) — A 7-year-old girl who had survived the crash of an Eastern Airlines jet at Kennedy International airport died today as a result of her massive burns, raising the toll from the tragedy to 111. Tina Dispenza's mother was killed in the crash and her father and 9-year-old sister remain in critical condition.

Plane Hijacked

SALONICA, Greece (Reuter) — A hijacker armed with a revolver today ordered the pilot of a Bulgarian plane on a domestic flight to fly to Salonica, where the man immediately asked for political asylum.

Logging Shutdown

PORT ALBERNI (CP) — MacMillan Bloedel announced today it will shut down some of its logging operations in the Alberni Valley and on the west coast of Vancouver Island for about two weeks this summer.

Leg-Trap Bill

OTTAWA (CP) — A bill to prohibit the use of certain animal traps was introduced in the commons on Friday by Donald Munro (PC—Esquimalt-Saanich). The bill is aimed mainly at leg-hold traps, which can result in the trapped animal dying slowly.

Greenpeace After Whaler Confrontation at Hand

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Greenpeace V anti-whaling mission has found its first dead whales and appears headed for its first confrontation with a Russian whaling fleet, a spokesman said Friday.

"Everything we planned is beginning to happen, "Rod Marining of the Greenpeace Foundation said in an interview.

Marining said the Greenpeace V crew reported it closed in Friday on the Russian whaling ship, Dalnovi Vostok, about 50 miles west of Eureka, Calif., and came across two dead whales.

The Canadian vessel now is pursuing the chaser boat Vlestny heading south, away from the Vostok.

"We intend to carry out our operation as we attempt to interfere with them," crew member Bob Hunter said in a taped report released here by the foundation.

"We have reason to believe that we've caught the Russians killing an undersized sperm whale," he said.

"Paul Watson (another crew member) got on top of one of the dead whales and we measured it. It was somewhat under 30 feet, probably smaller.

"We have to wait to develop the photographs to get the exact length because as we were trying to measure it a killer boat came charging towards us. We spun around our stern and they quickly hauled in the whales."

He said that the second sperm whale was slightly larger.

Meanwhile in London, the International Whaling Commission adopted new rules Friday regarded as the strongest conservation measures ever taken to protect the world's largest creature from extinction.

Ending its annual meeting, the commission brought in new catch quotas which should reduce the global whale catch by about 23 per cent in the coming season. This should bring a reduction of between 7,000 and 8,000 whales from last year's quota of 37,300.

VANCOUVER MAN SWEEP WINNER

VANCOUVER (CP) — Peter Cheng, 25, a Vancouver fisheries biologist, is about $78,000 richer today following the running of the Irish Derby at Curragh, Ireland.

Cheng held an Irish sweepstakes ticket on the winning horse, Grundy. The win was worth $118,000 but Cheng sold a half-interest in his ticket for $20,000.

He receives about $58,000 from the sweepstakes, plus $20,000 from the Irish gambling syndicate that purchased the half-interest.

Cheng said he's quite happy, even though he sold the share of his ticket. He said he made a gamble and he's happy with what he received. He added that he doesn't know what he will do with his winnings.

Another British Columbia winner was John Super of Courtenay. He held a ticket on the third-place horse, Anne's Pretender, and won about $23,600.

A Powell River resident also held a ticket on the third place horse.

B.C. Not Test Case For Curbs: Turner

OTTAWA (FP) — Finance Minister John Turner denied Friday that he has adopted a "B.C. first" approach in holding down wage increases across Canada.

He stressed both inside and outside the House of Commons that his efforts to reach a national consensus earlier this year on the need to keep prices and wages down was no different for one group than for another.

The B.C. Federation of Labor charged Thursday that Turner had persuaded forest industry companies to resist wage demands of the International Woodworkers of America on the grounds that "we've got to whip B.C. into line first," since wages are highest in that province.

At first Turner desnied in an interview ever meeting the forest industry council specifically but admitted representatives of the council may have been "around the table" when he talked to B.C. employers earlier in the year as part of his cross-Canada tour to find a consensus.

He denied saying anything in these meetings across the country to one group that he hadn't said to another, and refused to comment when asked if it wouldn't be logical to start a wage cut-back in B.C. where salaries already are the highest.

But later in the Commons he issued his denial of the B.C. Fed charge when John Fraser (PC-Vancouver South) noted that the allegation could have a "very grave" effect on forest industry negotiations now in progress.

"At no time did I make those representations," Turner declared.

U.K. 'SPIES' HELD BY IDI

NAIROBI, Kenya (UPI) — Uganda said today it had arrested two Britons for spying. Uganda state radio said President Idi Amin was "prepared to teach the British a lesson they will never forget."

The announcement clarified a Uganda radio statement Friday that Uganda had detained other members of its 700-strong British community who might suffer the same fate as British lecturer Dennis Hills.

Hostage Threatened Just Before Death

VANCOUVER (CP) — Prisoner Andy Bruce had his left arm around hostage Mary Steinhauser and was threatening her with a knife seconds before she was fatally shot and Bruce wounded, an inquiry into the recent British Columbia penitentiary siege was told Friday.

In the first eyewitness account of the incident, male nurse Tom Hudson gave detailed testimony of events before; during and after the shooting in the prison's classification centre.

But he said he had been absent when the hostages in a vault attached to the centre made their attack on Bruce and Dwight Lucas.

Minutes before the attack, both Bruce and Lucas appeared to be asleep outside the vault and prisoner Claire Wilson was inside the vault with the hostages, apparently asleep and unarmed, Mr. Hudson said.

He said he made two attempts—one written and one by signals—to tell authorities of the situation. It was during the second attempt that the hostages apparently made their rush.

Mr. Hudson said he was standing outside a Dutch door leading to the room during the shooting and was the first person inside when the shooting ended.

Bruce still had his arm around Miss Steinhauser as both lay on the floor bleeding, he said.

Mr. Hudson had taken the place of prison liaison officer Al Hadvick and industries officer Stan Miller, who had maintained close contact with the three prisoners throughout the 41-hour ordeal.

He began his watch at 12:05 a.m. June 11, he said, an hour before the shooting.

When he began his vigil, with a view through the top half of the Dutch door, Mr. Hudson observed Miss Steinhauser lying on a chesterfield in front of and parallel to a sliding door leading to the vault and hostages, he said. She remained there, resting, until seconds before the shooting, Mr. Hudson said.

Soon after he began his shift, Mr. Hudson noted that both Lucas and Bruce were nodding off to sleep, he testified.

Later, Bruce picked up a needle, demanded more Demerol and began to fix himself, but with difficulty.

When Mr. Hudson went to the washroom to pass a note on what he was observing, he heard a banging sound when the washroom door closed.

"I heard shouting, screams. I heard a clattering sound of furniture being knocked over."

At that moment, said Mr. Hudson, he ran straight out

'The Cod-Father' Draws Crowds

ALEXANDER
. . . beaming health

Dale Alexander blew through town again this week, tanned and chubby, beaming and bringing the good word about good health.

The good word in Alexander's case is all about cod liver oil and the much-travelled author, lecturer and "nutrition scientist" from California is so insistent he hts been dubbed "the Cod-father."

Alexander will lecture at Vancouver's Queen Elizabeth Theatre Sunday on "How to slow down the aging process." He's been telling people about the value of cod liver oil for the past 25 years, attracting an overflow crowd to The Empress when he spoke last year.

He says there's going to be a revolution in preventative medicine in the next five years or so "or we're going to be taxed out of our homes because it will cost $500 a day to be in hospital."

Staying healthy, he says, is a matter of assimilatisg dietary oils but the way we eat often inhibits this.

Out of this theory, the ice cube emerges as a "deadly crippler," congealing oils, blocking the digestive tract from drawing proper nourishment.

Life, Alexander insists, is war between solids and liquids in the stomach. The timing, temperature and type of liquids we drink will decide which disease brings us down.

Anyone who drinks coffee or tea, water or skim milk with meals, in fact from 10 minutes before meals to three hours after, is fouling up the critical oil absorption process.

"They'll be lucky to see 70 years, and that means they're lopping 50 years off their potential lifespan of 120 years."

Cod liver oil shouldn't be just a childhood supplement, he says, but a lifelong habit which will lubricate away troubles such as arthritis.

He recommends a spoonful of cod liver oil in three ounces of whole mi lk, shaken together to disguise the taste, and downed on an empty stomach an hour before breakfast.

When Alexander hits the road to promote his theories and books, he leaves modesty behind. He says he has asked his audiences in the past to promote him for a Nobel prize. Now he wants to be appointed "nutrition czar" by U.S. President Ford.

Bombing Raids Terrorize Wealthy Beirut Suburbs

BEIRUT (AP) — Hit-and-run bombers terrorized wealthy neighborhoods in this capital of Lebanon while street fighting raged unabated in the poorer eastern suburbs Friday night and early this morning.

The five-day casualty toll reached 42 dead and 97 wounded as eight more persons died overnight and 39 were wounded in the eastern suburbs where leftist Moslems and Palestinian guerrillas are battling right-wing Christian militiamen.

Dynamite blasts destroyed five shops and a Lebanese bank in business districts and quiet residential areas previously untouched by the conflict. One of the establishments was a British-owned grocery store popular with foreigners.

Beirut radio said the bombs were thrown "by elements who want to escalate tension in the capital." It also reported that Lebanese security forces were able to halt an outbreak of shooting in the city's main commercial area, on a street occupied by major foreign and Arab banks.

The U.S. and several other embassies warned their nationals to stay home because of isolated sniper fire.

MOST ROADS CLOSED

Most of the major roads in the northeast and eastern districts of Beirut were closed by armed roadblocks of a half dozen different factions.

Many believe Lebanon's parliamentary and presidential elections next year are an underlying factor in the hostilities, because of Moslem demands for a greater say in government over the Christian minority.

Yet another irritant is the Palestinian guerrill apresence in Lebanon,which the right-wing Falange party considers an armed threat to Lebanese sovereignty. On their part, the Palestinian guerrilla presence in Lebanon, which the right-date" their resistance movement with too many curbs.

The various disputes erupted in street fighting last April and May, leaving 450 dead.

Political efforts to defuse the situation have failed and the Lebanese army has not been ordered to intervene.

Health Program Curbs Budget Result—Barrett

The federal government's spending curbs for medicare will ultimately force the provincial government to hold back on new health programs, Premier Barrett said Friday.

Barrett returned from England Friday "just a little bit angry" about the tightened spending dealt to the provinces in the federal budget.

"The ability of this province to pioneer new health services is now impaired," he told a press conference, responding to a new system of staggered limits to federal contributions for medicare programs dropping to 13 per cent next year.

"It will also limit B.C.'s experimental programs into new health care fields — the Liberal government has made a major mistake.

"To put it bluntly Ottawa is going to destroy a good medicare scheme by squeezing the wealthier provinces and at the same time making them pay for the less wealthy provinces."

Although Barrett said he has no argument about equalizaton payments, giving assistance to less welathy provinces like Quebec "is just plain stuppid when that province, incidentally, is wasting a few million on the Olympics. It's absurd.

"Don't let the federal politicians kid you — it (a subsidy) will come from Ottawa in the end."

Finance Minister John Turner said in his budget speech, hospital and medical care is costing Ottawa $6 billion this year, nearly 20 per cent of the total budget.

The 13 per cent limit next year will drop to 10.5 per cent in 1977-78 and 8.5 per cent thereafter.

B.C. officials were looking forward to increased assistance from Ottawa for chronic care "and were attempting to get cost sharing for mental health care."

Ottawa, Barrett said, is destroying the traditonal patterns by the action.

B.C.'s medical care costs under the Medical Services Plan are estimated to increase from $113 million to $123 million in the current year. The total health department expenditure will be an estimated $712 million.

Other topics covered by Barrett included $200 million in British financing on the proposed $350 million oil refinery and criticism of Ottawa's increase of 15 cents in gasoline prices.

The 10 per cent excise tax, he said, is Ottawa's way of punishing the ordinary people of Canada already having a hard time coping with inflation.

"The tax should be on oil companies, not on users and the large corporations are being let off without a major increase in tax."

The provincial government will not likely take steps to lessen the burden. Barrett said the government has already been kind to motorists by providing the lowest auto insurance scheme in Canada through ICBC.

The province should be looking at 30 per cent increases in rates, "a route which we will not go, although there may be minor changes."

nical argument about the contract language, contrary to the understanding of the parties at the time the language was originally negotiated in 1972," Bennett said.

Viala said the union was supposed to be in negotiations with the industry "and if they ever sit down to talk to us, we'll discuss it with them.

"But we don't get excited every time a judge rules against us in arbitration," he said.

Asked if the industry's action could precipitate a walkout before the IWA and the pulp and paper unions have completed their strike votes, Viala said: "I think the boys will stay on the job until it's time."

Reg Ginn, PPWC national president, said Friday pulp unions have cancelled the contracts on a local level. He said it is a common move in the pulp and paper industry, unlike the forest industry, where it is just one more step leading to an expected strike.

He said he expects a strike to follow a strike vote which is underway among PPWC and CPU locals.

Ginn said he believes the companies are working in collusion against the British Columbia government because the companies are unhappy with stumpage rates and anti-pollution laws imposed by the government.

"So if they force us into a strike situation, the economy of the province is going to suffer and people are going to take a long look at the NDP government next time they go to the polls," he said.

Hostage, Con on Floor After Shooting in Vault

the exit of the building toward a trailer' where a tactical squad was stationed and ran up some steps to the door of the trailer.

"I shouted 'hit it' and turned around and ran straight back to the Dutch door." Mr. Hudson then jumped up on a chair outside the Dutch door and had a full view inside.

"I saw Lucas positioned on the right hand side of the vault door. The door appeared to be closed. He was wielding a knife and shouting obscenities.

"Lucas was facing toward me. I could see his face clearly—blood was coming down the forehead of his face.

"Bruce was positioned to the left of the vault door facing toward me. He was holding Mary with one arm around her.

"My impression was it was his left arm (holding her). Her head was slumped down. I couldn't see her face. He appeared to be holding her up.

In his other arm was a knife held six inches from Miss Steinhauser, Mr. Hudson testified.

'He shouted 'I'll kill her.' I shouted 'Don't make it worse Andy, cool it.'"

"At this time I thought Andy was going to stab Mary. "Then a window smashed to my left. Somebody shouted 'freeze' and the shooting started. Everything then happened so fast. I saw Lucas go down immediately. I figured he had been shot."

"Almost straight after I saw blood coming from Andy Bruce's face, I saw he and Mary go down."

Mr. Hudson said the action took place so fast that he could not remember how many shots were fired, or how many members of the tactical squad there were. He leaped over the Dutch door and unbolted it.

"I remember people going past me," he said. All I wanted to do was to get over where Mary was."

"By this time Lucas was on his feet. There appeared to be a struggle going on, Mary and Bruce were lying sprawled out. There was lots of blood all over the place."

Asked whether at any point in the incident he heard the words "don't shoot," Mr. Hudson said he did not and that the only word he heard was "freeze."

Prisoners 100 yards away, in affidavits released outside the inquiry Thursday, say they heard Miss Steinhauser shout 'don't shoot" twice.

The affidavits were released by an organization called the Prisoner's Union Committee.

AN OLD MINING SITE DOESN'T HAVE TO BE AN EYESORE

When you visit Barkerville today, it's hard to imagine that this was once the biggest city west of Chicago and north of San Francisco. But that's the way it was in the 1860's when Barkerville had a population of roughly 60,000 and fortunes were made in the gold claims of Williams Creek. This was the centre of the famed Cariboo gold rush…and it was the dash for gold that brought about construction of the first road to the interior. Recognizing the historic importance of Barkerville, our provincial government carried out a complete restoration of the old gold rush rown during the 1950's…and while the raucous atmosphere of a frontier mining town can never be fully re-created, there's endless fascination in exploring the buildings stocked with relics from our early days.

There are many mining towns around British Columbia…less colorful, perhaps, but just as important in their own way. Towns such as Sparwood, Merritt, Kimberley and Fraser Lake, whose economies depend on the jobs and payrolls generated by mining activity. For over a hundred years, mining has been a vital part of the life of this province. Recent legislation has hampered mining exploration and development, but our industry hopes to continue in its role as a major source of employment and tax revenue for all of British Columbia.

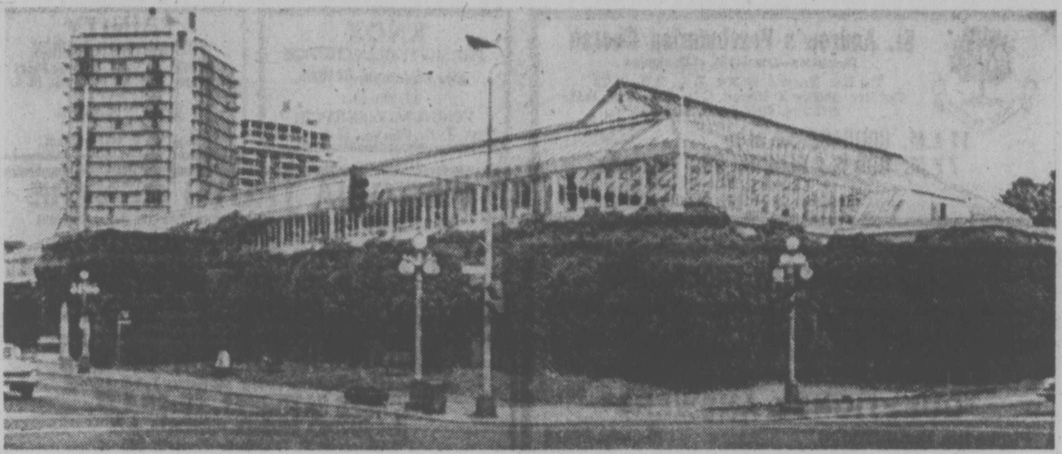
A unique 'centre of delight' that has gone in 50 years from splendor to shabbiness and now, perhaps, a new role in city's life



From Full-Dress Swims to Love It All Happened at the Gardens

Fifty years ago this week, the old town was jumping and Victorians were all agog to see the most magnificent tructural oddity since the Empress Hotel.

The occasion was the carnival week to mark the formal opening of the Crystal Garden, that unique "centre of delight" complete with salt water swimming pool, ballrooms, "the most beautiful indoor gardens imaginable" and picture galleries.

Although the building had been open to the public since June 8, 1925, the carnival celebrations were spread over the week June 26 to July 1.

Lieutenant Governor Walter C. Nichol kicked off the proceedings by crowning Faith Robson Queen of the Crystal Garden Festival, in front of a crowd of about 10,000 sepctators gathered outside the legislative buildings.

Then over to the new amusement centre where, presented with a golden key by D. C. Coleman, vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railways Western Lines, Nichol formally opened the Crystal Garden to the public.

Speechifying concluded, the CPR officials, the reeves and their spouses, and sundry other dignitaries capped off the big day with — what else? — an inaugural ball.

"Champers" flowed by the magnum, the flappers performed their knee-knocking dance routines with uninhibited zest . . . and the Crystal was duly christened.

It continued to sparkle with life for most of the half-century that followed.

Thousands swam — and some even reached Olympic standard — in the pool itself, which for the first 29 years of its life was filled with salt water pumped from Horseshoe Bay at the foot of Douglas Street.

Occasionally it was drained and filled with chairs, with a stage at the shallow end, for prize fights and concerts.

Banquets, balls, lectures, pet shows, flower shows . . . you name it and it was probably held in the adjoining ballrooms.

Romance bloomed under the palmettoes, riotous times were enjoyed and bizarre scenes recorded.

There was, for example, that strange full-dress swim in 1940, when for a $50 bet three members of a logging convention earned a round of applause by swimming the length of the pool . . . in their dinner jackets!

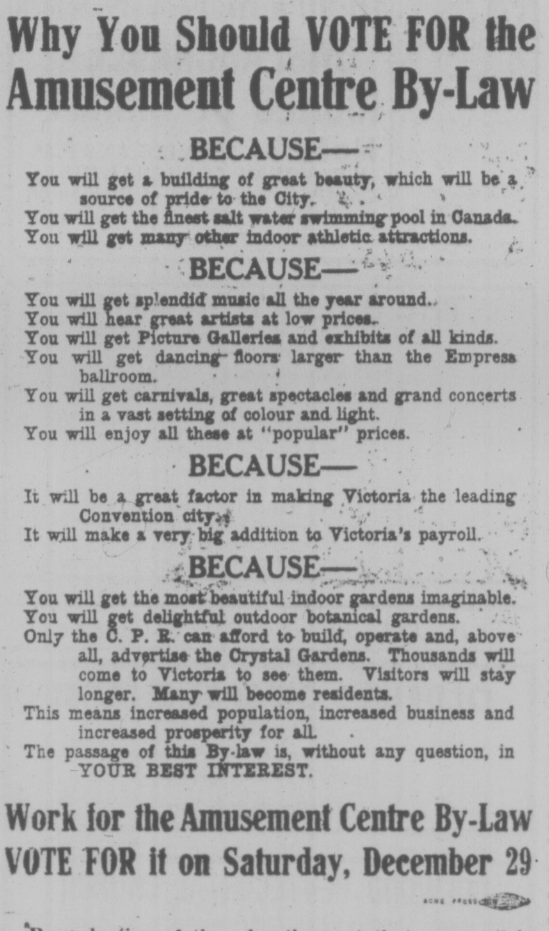
But then began the steady decline, from a once-elegant Victorian lady to a rather shabby, tarty old gal.

Finally, years of neglect took their toll. The city, which had inherited the building from the CPR in 1965 when the company relinquished its lease, recoiled in fright from a repair bill two years later.

Council learned then that a major overhaul would cost about $600,000 and decided the wise thing was to build a new pool — which eventually cost four times as much.

Abandoned in late 1971, the Crystal Garden now makes a mockery of its pretentious name with a depressing picture of dereliction and decay: broken floor boards, missing panes from the huge glass roof, the unmistakeable evidence of its latter-day doss house patrons.

But it is to be exhumed, the present city council has decreed. The hat will be passed around to wealthy foundations, $1.5 million collected and the Crystal Garden will begin new life — who knows, perhaps for another half-century at least — as a botanical garden and aviary.



Why You Should VOTE FOR the Amusement Centre By-Law

BECAUSE—

You will get a building of great beauty, which will be a source of pride to the City.
You will get the finest salt water swimming pool in Canada.
You will get many other indoor athletic attractions.

BECAUSE—

You will get splendid music all the year around.
You will hear great artists at low prices.
You will get Picture Galleries and exhibits of all kinds.
You will get dancing floors larger than the Empress ballroom.
You will get carnivals, great spectacles and grand concerts in a vast setting of colour and light.

BECAUSE—

It will be a great factor in making Victoria the leading Convention city.
It will make a very big addition to Victoria's payroll.

BECAUSE—

You will get the most beautiful indoor gardens imaginable.
You will get delightful outdoor botanical gardens.
Only the C. P. R. can afford to build, operate and, above all, advertise the Crystal Gardens. Thousands will come to Victoria to see them. Visitors will stay longer. Many will become residents.
This means increased population, increased business and increased prosperity for all.
The passage of this By-law is, without any question, in YOUR BEST INTEREST.

Palmy days around the pool for an intimate luncheon

And, It Came to Pass That After 15 Years . . .

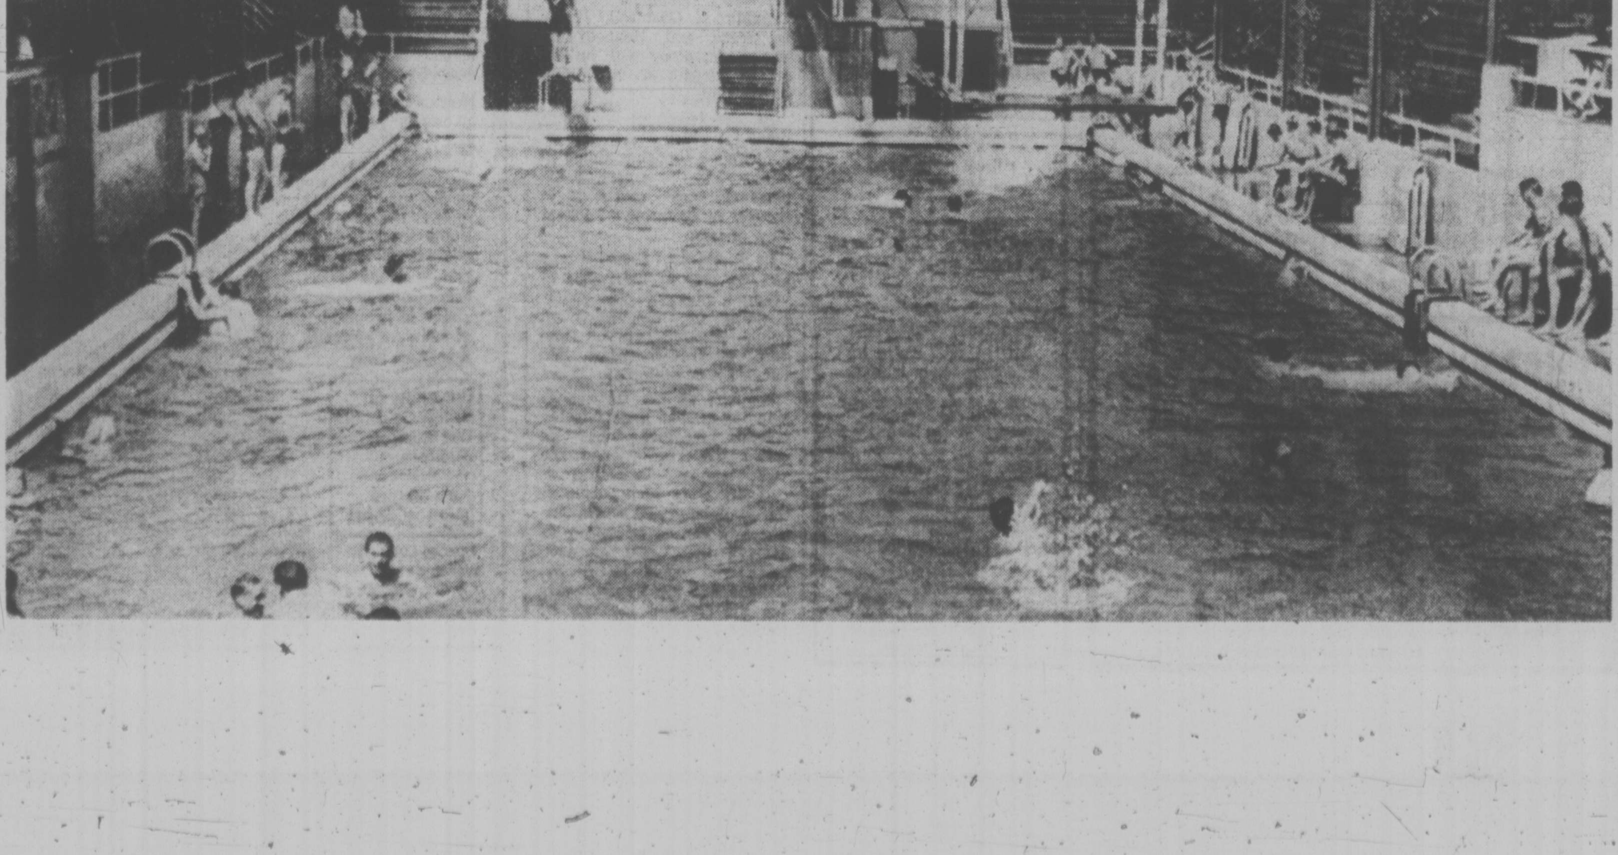
Perhaps the Crystal Garden could have been called The Last Dike, because it came about through the Canadian Pacific Railway's constant quest for the good deal, the fast buck, the juicy tax concession.

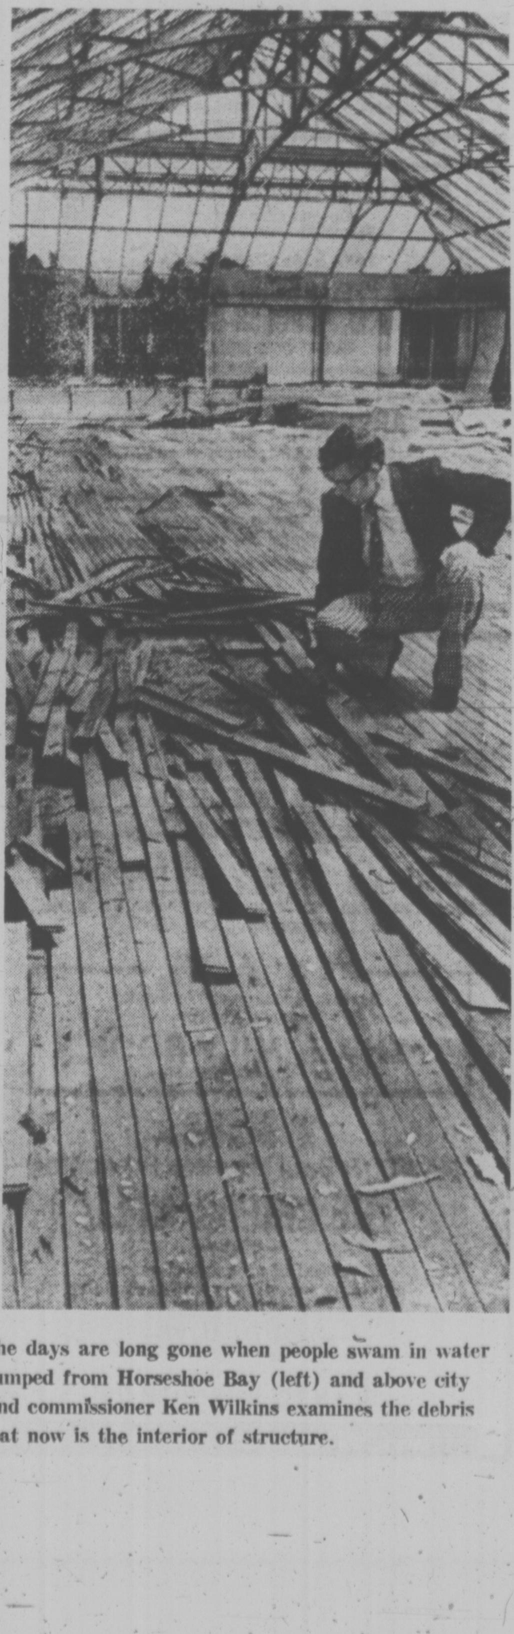
Terms for the construction of the Empress Hotel included tax concessions and free water for the first 15 years, says city archivist Ainslie Helmcken.

With the agreement's expiry date fast approaching, the CPR faced a whopping tax increase plus a big water bill, and this in a period of depression.

The city craftily suggested that it might be prepared to offer a better deal if the company would build an amusement centre, including a swimming pool.

The bylaw provided the company with 20 years' free water and exemption from taxes, plus a fixed tax and water rate for the Empress.





The days are long gone when people swam in water pumped from Horseshoe Bay (left) and above city land commissioner Ken Wilkins examines the debris that now is the interior of structure.

Churches Serve Dual Role

EDMONTON (CP) — Many churches in Canada have been in financial straits for years and many older, big-city churches have folded because they had no way to pay the bills. One development company things it has a solution.

A. V. Carlson Construction Ltd. and its management services arm are suggesting that churches make use of the resources they have, often in the form of land, to develop community-service centres which house both sanctuaries and community facilities and provide income.

Stan Clarke, client consulting manager, said in an interview churches have lost contact with communities in many cases and Carlson's proposal gives the church a chance to get back into communities by meeting both social and religious needs.

The proposal has been tried in both Edmonton and Yellowknife.

In Yellowknife the United Church wanted to provide services for everyone from toddlers to senior citizens. By using its existing structure and remaining land, it is in the process of building two 10-storey towers.

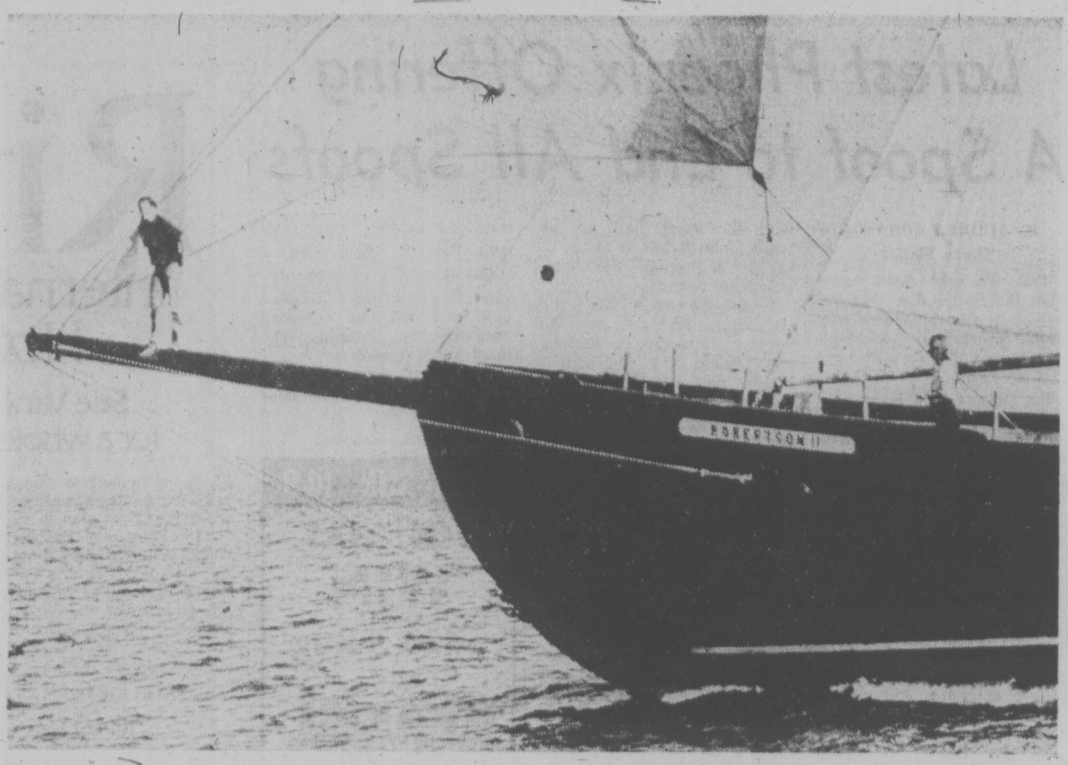
The towers include a large multi-purpose hall suitable for meetings and church services, smaller committee rooms and a chapel, five floors to rooms to be leased to the YWCA, two floors of apartments for rent to the general public, three floors of space available for rent to community-service groups with the rest used as apartments for senior citizens or the general public, Clarke said.

A massive project for a congregation of 150, but Mr. Clarke said it doesn't have to be a burden. The congregation set up a non-profit corporation which borrowed all of the $5.3 million needed for capital from Central Mortgage and Housing Corp. The loan will be repaid, less a 10-per-cent forgiveness, over 50 years with income from the building. Any surplus is used to improve the facility or further subsidize rents for the senior citizens.

A full-time manager and cleaning staff handle day-today administration and maintenance.

Carlson Construction takes about five per cent of the cost of the project, which it designs, plans and builds, as a fee.

The concept, Clarke said, is based on getting maximum value out of the land available. The company uses a curve to plot the size of the structure in relation to what surveys show its occupancy will be, so amenities such as lounges and game rooms can be included.



SAILING SCHOONER Robertson II of Victoria has found a temporary skipper for its summer West Trek adventure program. Vic Hookins will run the Quest Star Life Discovery Society's boat introducing young people to the claims of Jesus Christ on their lives. A permanent skipper is still needed, though, said city psychiatrist Dr. Philip Ney who heads the society aiming to help youth find purposes in life.

Jehovah's Witness Convention Set

Clare Statton, convention manager from Victoria, said a four-day meeting is scheduled for the Memorial Arena, July 17 to 20.

Statton said 4,000 delegates are expected for the Victoria convention.

"This convention is one of over one hundred planned for the United States and Canada during June, July and August," he said. "This includes assemblies in the English, Spanish, French, Greek, Portuguese and Italian languages."

Commenting on the total attendance, Statton said over one million delegates are anticipated to attend conventions of Jehovah's Witnesses this year in the Northern Hemisphere.

The program at the Arena will run from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. and 3 to 5:30 p.m. each of the four days. It will include four spectacular Bible dramas in full costume, lectures and symposiums and discussions on subjects of vital interest to humankind today.

"Problems are certainly not new," Statton added, "but all are finding that these problems have intensified in recent months. Men in responsible positions actually fear global disaster including inflation, extreme food shortages, population explosion and increasing crime and terrorism.

"Oil shortages and economic collapse threaten many nations. In fact," he said, "so many groups met in 1974 that it has been called 'the year of international conferences.'

"Today what affects one segment of society affects all, many times with extreme suddenness. Therefore, the convention program will deal with all of these problems and, more importantly, show the ultimate solution to all human crises."

Statton said all sessions will be open to the public.

Pioneers' President

Bill Hitchin of 1060 Benvenuto Drive, Brentwood Bay, has been installed as the Victoria president of the Telephone Pioneers of America and will take over his duties July 1.

Telephone Pioneers is a social service organization within the phone industry.

Dave Innes, of 1249 Tattersall, has been installed as vice-president of the Victoria branch.

DRIVEI-N CHURCH HERALDS SUMMER

Volkswagen beetles on lime-green posters to be found around Victoria tell of a truly up-to-date summer Christian service swinging into its second year.

Victoria's Drive-in Church at the Hillside Shopping Centre will be celebrated every Sunday evening from 8:30 to 9:15 during July and August.

Sponsored by Emmanuel Baptist, the service takes place in the main mall entrance of the parking lot.

Inaugurated last year, the service was highly successful and attracted an average of 450 people each week.

"The reasons for its success are that the service is short, lively and interesting, people don't have to enter a stuffy, hot building and they can come as casually as they wish," said Emmanuel Youth Minister Norman Barton.

"There is no offering and no coercion to find church prospects at the service," he said.

Variety of Events Highlight Sunday

Events of spiritual merit for Sunday include:

—Salvation Army Band and choir members performing outdoors in the Cameron Band Shell of Beacon Hill Park at 7 p.m. Third in a series of 12 interdenominational Christian services in the park this summer, it will be conducted by Major Ivan McNeilly of the Victoria Citadel Corps.

—Combined services of Cordova Bay United and St. David by-the-Sea Anglican start this week for the summer as Archdeacon E. H. Maddocks preaches at 9:45 a.m. in Cordova Bay church. This year marks the seventh the two churches have come together regularly for worship.

—Missionary Rev. Paul Kaufman will speak at Trinity Christian Centre services 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. Leader of the Hong Kong-based missionary organization Asian Outreach, Kauffman says Christianity flourishes in China despite religious repression of the 1960s there.

Only Transport New For Travelling Minister

EDMONTON (CP) — In 1925, travelling Rev. A. B. Simpson halted his horses at a little church, sounded the bell and waited for the Indians to "appear out of the bush."

Today, 50 years after the formation of the United Church of Canada, he still is crossing miles to minister to souls—but now he stops his 1970 Ford at a country church and waits for the congregation to appear in cars.

Mr. Simpson, one of the men who has conducted services in the United Church since it began, celebrated the 50th anniversary of the union of Methodists, Congregationalists and most Presbyterians into one united church in Canada.

"When I got to church, I would ring the bell because the Indians had no watches to keep time, and they would come from every direction out of the bush."

That church was on a Manitoba Indian reserve, one of the many parishes between the Yukon and Nova Scotia Mr. Simpson has served.

"Weekdays, I'd visit their wigwams or shacks. I love people—all people. I love to sit and talk to families in the evenings, and I spent practically every night doing that kind of thing."

The son of a Maritimes merchant, Mr. Simpson, now living in Edmonton, grew up on a cargo vessel bringing molasses and spices from the West Indies. He's never left the sea in spirit, and now sees himself as captain of a ship of souls.

The role of the clergyman has changed over the last 50 years, he observed.

"The clergyman used to be set apart as a spiritual leader, God's representative whose specialty was the steering of souls. As with the sea captain, you put your life in his hands when you were over the deep oceans."

Nowadays, the clergyman has become more of a counsellor than God's representative in many cases. Sunday he's Reverend; Monday he's "Butch."

Mr. Simpson said he will continue as a seven-day-a-week clergyman for the rest of his life, even though he was supposed to retire in 1968. He still leads services almost every Sunday in small Alberta communities.

Still partly Presbyterian at heart, Mr. Simpson said "I felt union was engineered to a great degree by people in the establishment in Toronto who got the idea because the church would be bigger, it would be better. I wasn't much in favor of union then and I'm not yet."

But Florence Scoffield, also a member of the United Church since its beginning, says there were many advantages to the union.

Settling back on the couch in her Edmonton home, she said "one of the big motivating conditions was that missionaries from the churches found it difficult to get across to people that there were all these different churches and it was the same Christian religion.

"But the main urge towards union was biblical, the saying of Jesus "that all may be one."

There were also financial considerations and a shortage of ministers.

In fact, there were so few ministers that when Mrs. Scoffield took her first teaching job in 1923 in a one-room log schoolhouse, it also involved conducting Sunday services at the school.

There was yet another reason for the formation of the United Church, she added.

"Many of the churches in the west had already been united but there still was great fragmentation with a Church of God down the road from the Church of the True God, a few miles away from the Church of the Only True God."

However, sometimes unification had a fragmenting effect, she said.

"There were quite a few hard feelings and some families broke instead of unifying over the issue."

But the 50-year-old union is widely accepted now, and further unions will come, said Mrs. Scoffield.

PREACHER PAYS DEBT

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (UPI) — Fourteen years ago, W. C. Hunter, "obsessed with gambling and wild ways," stole $3,000 from the grocery store where he worked.

Now a minister in the World's Church of The Living God, Hunter, 39, returned this week to the store "to make restitution."

A Christian for the last 10 years, he said he decided to practice what he preaches. Although he confessed to his congregation the details of his former life and the theft, "it didn't seem like it was enough."

So he and his wife met with Don Blevins, the head of the food store, and discussed terms of restitution.

"I have been forgiven by God," Hunter said. "Now I want forgiveness from the people I stole from."

The visit to the store was preceded by a confession to the Chattanooga police department.

"I didn't know whether they were going to put me in jail," he said. "I just felt I couldn't face my congregation knowing about the crime. After all, I could still preach in prison, too."

A call to the state attorney general's office disclosed that the statute of limitations had run out and Hunter remained free.

"That was just one more thing I had to thank God for," he said.

He explained that at 25 he was "obsessed with gambling and wild ways," and had run ups everal gambling debts. One afternoon, the safe at the grocery store where he was a clerk broke down, and the owner was forced to hide about $3,000 in a produce bin.

"I knew they would have the safe fixed by the next day so I hid downstairs until everyone had gone, then got the money and left without anyone seeing me," Hunter confessed.

"Man, I felt good with that big sack of money. I bought a half a pint of gin, went to the pool hall to celebrate and afterwards I went home and my wife and I rolled up the money bill by bill and stuck them in Christmas balls."

Some Nifty Needling

By DON VIPOND
Times Staff

So you think your mummy is handy with a needle and thread?

At Victoria hospitals plastic surgeons are preparing to undertake some stitching which would make anybody's mother turn in her thimble.

It's called micro-vascular surgery and it's a sort of invisible mending.

It involves work so fine it's about as hard to describe as it is to see.

But take this skinny piece of string and assume it's a vein. If it was broken in two, how would you go about sewing the butt ends together — with up to eight sutures — so it was a hollow tube again? That's what micro-vascular surgery is all about.

It's not work for anyone in a hurry. One of the plastic surgeons Dr. Tom McQueen, says operations can take up to 10 hours and can be "fairly tedious."

One misplaced stitch or suture and the job is ruined. There is simply no room for error.

So surgeons do the job through a microscope which magnifies the operating field up to 25 times. They use instruments which look like cutlery from a doll's house.

Micro-vascular surgery comes into play when someone loses a finger, for example, and doctors want to sew it back on, or when someone loses a patch of their hide in an accident such as a motorcycle spill and a patch from elsewhere on their body must be used to close the wound.

In either case the blood supply which nourishes the tissue has to be re-established and that means re-connecting the tiny veins and arteries which carry it.

Chinese and Japanese surgeons are pioneers in the field. Micro-vascular surgery has arrived in Victoria because the ladies auxiliary at Victoria General Hospital came up with the money, about $800, to buy the initial set of about a dozen instruments.

MICROSCOPE which magnifies work up to 25 times as well as steady pair of hands are needed for operations which can take up to 10 hours.

20% Hike For Homes —Realtor

By AL FORREST
Times Staff

Value of homes in the Victoria area will rise 20 per cent this year, mainly due to increased land values, according to spokesmen of the real estate industry.

A survey by the Times produced the following consensus on the housing market:

—House prices, on average, have already risen 10 per cent during the first six months of this year and are expected to rise another 10 per cent by year's end.

—The price of land is the main factor in the increase. For example, view lots in Gordon Head that sold for $24,000 in January now are valued at $32,000, an increase of 33 per cent.

—Any used house on the market under $50,000 is sold very quickly and price increases have been rapid. Any house listed in the low $40,000s that is livable will sell the same day it is listed.

—New houses under $55,000 are a real bargain on today's market and are the result of a large surplus of this type of housing that was completed during the winter when the demand was almost nil due to the lack of mortgage funds. While these houses are well-priced, their number is dwindling fast because of renewed interest in new homes.

—Newly-constructed homes over $55,000 are also selling well and can be expected to go up 10 per cent in price between now and year's end, mainly due to land values.

—There has been little increase is the value of homes above $125,000 and the market for this type of housing has been slow.

While housing prices and land values have risen strongly in the first six months, some of the increase was a restoration of values lost during the winter slump.

For example, good view lots in Gordon Head had been selling for as much as $29,000 last June before the price fell to $24,000 in January. The price for land and housing has increased steadily since winter.

D. F. Hanley of D. F. Hanley Agencies Ltd. said the outlook for the last half of 1975 is for a very orderly market with gradual price increases.

He said the price escalation and demand for houses in the first half of 1974 was excessive, followed by a severe slump in demand and prices.

This was a result of a drying up of mortgage funds. The supply of mortgage money is improved this year and the flow of funds could be even higher next year.

"A 20 percent increase in the value of homes this year may seem high, but it may be nothing compared to the escalations we could have in 1976 if, as we expect American investment flows into this country in the form of mortgage funds. Prices would really take off."

A spokesman for Block Bros. confirmed that real estate prices are expected to rise about 20 per cent in 1975.

He said the supply of mortgage funds continues to be fairly good with the prevailing interest rate ranging from 11 per cent to 11.25 per cent.

Spokesmen for the Greater Victoria Real Estate Board also confirmed that price escalation of 20 per cent, on average, could be expected this year. The rate of increase would depend upon the type of house and its location.

House prices would increase faster than the Canadian average at the present rate of climb.

While a 20 per cent increase is expected here, the average Canadian house is expected to go up only 15 per cent this year, according to a study by Arthur Mingay, national president of Canada Trust Co.

Because of the high prevailing interest rates across the board, mortgage interest rates may have to rise above the present level of 11 to 11.25 per cent to attract investment funds to the mortgage market, Mingay said.

Club Seeks Sci-Fi Fans

Science fiction buffs speak a language all their own — so one of their problems is finding others in the community keen to chat in the same jargon.

That's why Stan Hyde of 3014 Pickford Rd. and Kirk Bullough of 3012 Volmer Rd. in Victoria, together with a couple of others, have in mind launching a local SF club if enough space age fans are around to support it.

What do sci-fi types talk about?

The literature, the movies, the art, any facet of the subject, Hyde said Friday.

He and Bullough are both university students but he says the subject attracts people of all ages and both sexes. They number in the thousands and are organized around the world, with a wealth of magazines and newsletters catering to their special interests.

And space dreamers have been around for awhile, long before moon landings and blockbuster films like 2001: a Space Odyssey, snapped the general public's attention to worlds beyond.

Hyde attended the 31st World Science Fiction Convention ("Worldcon" in the jargon) in Toronto two years ago which attracted 3,000. Last year's Worldcon in Washington, D.C., pulled about 6,000. This year the world conference is in Australia.

In Vancouver, there is the B.C. Science Fiction Association, where the last annual meeting in February drew an audience of about 500.

Anyone interested in taking part in a local club can write Hyde or Bullough or phone Hyde at 478-3195.

Doctor Wins $9,000 Award For Dismissal

A former Victoria doctor who claimed he was wrongfully dismissed from his job at Gorge Road Hospital has been awarded $9,000 in damages and costs.

The parties, David Charles Arnott and the hospital, reached the settlement midway through a B.C. Supreme Court trial Thursday.

The trial, in front of Mr. Justice Victor Dryer, was to have run for three days, but the parties came up with an agreement Thursday, Arnott's lawyer Don Farquhar said Friday.

Farquhar said the hospital, represented by lawyer Ken Murphy, agreed to pay Arnott $7,500 in general damages, $500 special damages and $1,000 for costs.

Arnott, 60, a medical doctor who was hired in September, 1969, as medical co-ordinator of the hospital, claimed in the court case that the hospital had breached its contract with him in June, 1973.

Arnott charged the hospital had changed the terms of his employment creating conditions which were "unreasonable and impossible" for him to accept.

Farquhar argued that by thus changing the conditions of his employment, the hospital had "thereby effectively and improperly dismissed (him) from his employment."

MUSEUM MISSING 9 RARE BOOKS

Nine rare books worth about $4,000 are missing from the Maritime Museum.

Missing is a three-volume collection entitled Voyage to the Pacific Ocean, 1776-1780, published in London in 1785, with two volumes edited by Captain James Cook and the third by James King.

Also gone is a six-volume collection, Voyage of Discovery to the North Pacific Ocean, edited by John Vancouver and published in London in 1801.

The Cook set, a second edition, is valued at $3,500, said museum director Col. J. W. D. Symons today.

The Vanocuver set, also a second edition, is valued at about $500.

Symons said police were notified Thursdy, and they will alert booksellers to watch for anyone trying to sell the books.

"I think a fellow who's taken books like this, a complete set, they're probably going into his own library," he added.

The books were kept in the museum library which is normally reserved for museum staff and members and off bounds to visitors, said Symons.

However the room has been used for meetings and lectures, he said, so many have had access to it.

The books ar believed to have disappeared anytime in the past three years.

Symons said staff noticed one book missing, so a check of other rare books was made and disappearance of the others was discovered.

The Arts of the Raven Gallery at 45 Bastion Square lost more than $3,000 worth of sterling silver jewelry in a break-in overnight Wednesday, Victoria police reported.

Four Firemen Injured Fighting House Fire

Four city firemen were hurt fighting a house fire Friday and a fifth man was injured later when struck by a falling chandelier.

A fire department spokesman said two of the firemen suffered cut hands and two others received back injuries.

The fire, in a house occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Harry Prescott at 2512 Wark, caused an estimated $5,000 damage.

A relative of the tenants, Cyril Prescott, 35, of 128 Randal, was injured when he entered the house after the fire and the chandelier fell while he was standing in the living room.

He was treated by Royal Jubilee Hospital for a neck injury and later released.

The spokesman said the fire broke out in a bedroom clothes cupboard and spread through the bedroom and livingroom.

He said one possible cause of fire was children playing with matches.

Instrument Maker of New Breed

max low

There is a young lady of the lake I know, who sits and dreams her life away.

She paints, when the mood takes her. But moods are not demanding.

And often I have envied her.

Driftwood guitar

But not any more; not since I met Je Titus. For Je sits on enchanted Hornby Island, not dreaming nor drifting but creating things of great beauty and selling what he creates in order to exist as one of what he describes as "a new breed of self-sufficient young people."

I first found Je Titus, musical instrument-maker supreme, at the Arts Caravan, a sort of small rock festival going on last weekend at a Hornby Island campground, where he was filling in on electric bass for the short-handed touring Whitewater band.

But later we met again where he and Martha Ellis and their Tonkanese kitten named Riva live in a little house overlooking Sandpiper Beach. And, while a record of Laurindo Almeido and the Modern Jazz Quartet played softly in the background, Je talked of architecture and of how the design of buildings led to the creation and building of musical instruments.

Je (you pronounce it Jay) was born in Champagne, Illinois, but he is quick to tell you that he's been in Canada as a landed immigrant for six years.

Martha comes from a little village near Hamilton in Ontario and she teaches music at Hornby Island School as well as giving private piano lessons and joining Je in the evenings as one-third of the six-member band in the Thatch, the island's neighborhood pub.

Je studied architecture, art and anthropology at Arizona State College but music was in his blood and he began making 12-string guitars while he was at school. His father is professor of music at Concordia College in St. Paul, Minn., and his mother teaches music and Je describes the first instrument he learned to play as "enforced piano."

Now, after 11 years as a professional instrument-maker, Je Titus has made such a name for himself, such a reputation for exquisite craftsmanship that he doesn't need to advertise. His customers are all friends or relations of former customers. And the word keeps spreading. He receives so many inquiries that he is at least a year behind with his orders. And to help him out, he is training Swiss-born apprentice Gilbert Gussett.

His work is highly-regarded in Vancouver, where most of his customers live, and he makes instruments for the Early Music Society there.

"I made a rebec, which they have been using in their concerts for the last few years, and I'm working on a Gothic harp for them right now," says Je.

Titus, who says he learned a lot from Victoria resident Henk Newnhouse — "an old man who has been very fair with his ideas" — doesn't just make instruments from standard designs but creates his own original works of art for the music world.

"I design most of the shapes myself and have over 30 different designs for electric instruments, six of which I consider classic forms," says Je, who makes all kinds of guitars, banjos, lutes, dulcimers and harps.

Today, Je works mostly on the small Irish harps because "there are so few people making them now." It takes about a month working every day to make a harp and Je sells them for $300 up, depending on the type of wood and the number of abalone shell or silver inlay carvings done. Dulcimers can cost from $130 to $300, again depending on the kind of wood and the inlays.

Much of the materials used comes from driftwood found on the beach not more than 100 feet from Je's front door. Some of the wood used comes from a hardward wholesalers in Vancouver and Je has to go over and "listen" to every piece.

But driftwood and roofing shake blocks can make parts of the instruments.

"The occasional shake block has the right ring to it to make an instrument top," says Je. "The sounding board on top is always red cedar or spruce, whether it's a guitar harp or dulcimer," he explains. "And the rest can be walnut, mahogany, rosewood or maple.

"See this guitar, I made it in two days out of a mahogany plank that drifted up from the ocean. I thought it was very appropriate to Hornby Island."

But that guitar and a traditional Irish harp, which has a design dating back more than 1,000 years, are the only two instruments Je owns. He didn't have one of his own for a stretch of six years.

"It may seem silly for an instrument-maker not to own an instrument," Je laughs, "but that's the funny thing, when you finish one there's always a customer waiting and the landlord is waiting and the grocer is waiting . . . ."

After some years on Pender Island and then Galiano Island, living in a commune of musical-instrument and geodesic dome ("you might call them spaces to live in") builders, Je moved to Hornby "because of the vibrations," two and-a-half years ago.

Je Titus . . . vibrations on an island beach

"This is a very unique island in terms of the proportion of young people who have got past the exploring stage and are relatively successful craftsmen," explains Je. "This is a craftsmen's island."

"I feel good with the people here — it's the first place I've ever lived where I've felt I could relate to the community as a whole. A lot of the people here are my fellows — they are successful young craftspeople — and a lot of the people who aren't that are sympathetic to that lifestyle."

It's a delightful place and the people I met were warm and friendly. But it's not an island of young drifters and dreamers. They work hard.

"Instead of just drifting, I'm creating something worthwhile and not being a burden on society," says Je. "I am doing my creation day by day; I can fix my own car, repair my own stereo if it breaks down and am putting in a garden. I'm self-sufficient."

"I believe the world is changing rapidly and there is a breed of self-sufficient young people emerging."

Now there, on Hornby Island, is a spirit I can envy.
